New Yorkers Run Miami Racket Spots, Probers Told

Florida City's Crime Commission Chief Gives Many Names To Senate Group

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Miami, July 13.—The story of this winter playground's infestation by the Nation's biggest racketeers and the indifference—or worse—of local law enforcement officials was spread before the Senate Crime Investigating Committee here today.

It was the first day of what looks like a three-day hearing in the Federal Court House for the visiting Senators and a standing-room-only audience.

Daniel Sullivan, director of the Miami Crime Commission, presented, with the aid of charts, the story of what he called the "New York Syndicate" and how it has run three big gambling spots in the south Florida area—Colonial Inn, Green Acres Club and Club Boheme. He listed Frank Costello, Frank Erickson, Joe Adonis, Jake and Meyer Lansky and other well-known gamblers as top figures in these and allied operations. Most of Sullivan's story had been told before.

Names Scores of Racketeers

Sullivan said the gamblers at one time had a gambling concession in the Roney Plaza Hotel, later took over the Wofford Hotel as "the meeting place for nationally known racketeers from all over the country" and now use the Grand Hotel. He named scores of racketeers from Northern States, presented their police photos and records and pictures of many palatial homes they now occupy here.

But Sullivan stated that the local gambling syndicate, the S and G, does an even bigger business than the straight-out New York and other crowds. He estimated the S and G annual gross take at 30 to 40 million dollars, with a net of 4 to 8 millions. The others take in a mere 8 to 10 million, he said.

The S and G syndicate, Sullivan explained, was a strictly local outfit until about a year ago when the northerners—he didn't say who—muscled in. They put Harold

17-Year-Old Robs Bank of $32,239 But Soon Loses It

Baltimore, July 13 (AP).—A 17-year-old boy with a stunted mind held up the manager of a branch bank today and got $32,239.

Apparently Charles W. Johnson didn't know anything to do then but run. An alert garage mechanic put police on his trail and two patrolmen caught him in a few minutes with the money.

"Charles has never been able to learn since he fell off the garage when he was in the second grade," his mother told police. The boy is one of eight children.

"This is the first day he's lost from work," his mother said. "He gave me $20 every week. He shined his shoes every morning. Every night he brought me a soft drink, or a cake, or potato chips. He handled money very carefully. He is kind. He would give you the shirt off his back," she added.

14 From D. C. Area Stood Vigil Under Fire as Reds Hit Kimpo

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

Fourteen Washington area residents and 13 other Kimpo Airport employes stood grimly by to defend their field after the North Korean invasion until they were ordered evacuated on an hour's notice.

Their story, written from memory when all their records and most of their clothing were lost in the hasty flight from the Seoul area airbase to Japan, has been sent here to Thomas B. Bourne Associates, Inc., which operated the field under a CAA contract. The engineering and architects' firm has offices in the Dupont Circle Building here.

The firm yesterday released this list of personnel from the local area:

Lloyd R. Bradshaw and wife, Helen K. Bradshaw, 1616 W st. se.

Attilio F. Gramolini and wife Elizabeth R. Gramolini, 819 Chetworth pl., Alexandria, Va.

Byron W. Moore, 2307 3d st. ne.

Joseph Sabacky, 109 Spring dr., Falls Church, Va.

Lester M. Scott, 1204 Dupont Circle Bldg.

Edward L. Traylor and wife Mildred Traylor, 1705 Lanier pl. nw.

Traylor, who started the "monthly report" which told of the invasion, indicated the North Korean attack came as no surprise:

"We had attended many of the regular security meetings conducted at the Embassy. A well-organized plan had been formulated and was always reviewed and revised, if necessary, at each meeting.

"Kimpo was an important place, according to this plan. The part the Bourne Associates employes would take if an emergency arose was to keep the runway open and prepare for a combat landing

1200 Red Spies and Guerillas Executed by South Koreans

By Marguerite Higgins

With American Forces in Korea, July 13 (NYHT).—The South Korean government since the war began has executed more than 1200 Communist spies and guerillas, some of whom have even managed to penetrate the American command post in the guise of South Korean officers.

This information came today from South Korea's police chief, Kim Tai Sun, during an interview at the front line. The police chief said his firing squad has been working overtime, as the police are redoubling their effort to check North Korean Communists who have caused havoc by penetrating the American lines in force in various disguises and by attacking the troops from the rear.

During a front-line inspection tour, Kim, who said he spent two years at Northwestern University, reported that Red guerilla activity is increasing as the Americans fall back. The retreats have caused confusion and this has made infiltrations easy and maintenance of law and order more difficult.

The police chief said that a number of known Communists masquerading as members of the South Korean republican army had been caught in the American command post. The Communists had swiftly donned captured uniforms of the South Korean army—uniforms that

Official Admits Milk Inspection Breakdown

Some Farms Checked Once or Not at All In Year, Hearing Told

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Health inspections of farms supplying milk to Washington have been lax, a District official admitted yesterday before a House District Subcommittee.

Walter W. Burdette, chief of the District Bureau of Food Inspection, testified that several farms serving the Washington market had not been inspected for a year, and others only once in that period.

Each farm, he said, should be inspected six times a year but no farm was inspected more than three times last year.

Burdette was questioned closely by Representative Arthur L. Miller (R., Neb.) who has introduced a bill to let in milk to Washington from outside the present milkshed.

Miller demanded that Burdette furnish the names of the farm operators whose farms received little or no inspection last year—a demand upheld by Subcommittee Chairman Thomas G. Abernethy (D., Miss.).

Burdette caused another flurry when, under prodding by Smith, he blamed Congress for lack of proper inspection. He said the District had only seven milk inspectors last year. Because one was ill—he recently died—there were only six inspectors available most of the time, Burdette declared.

The District official said 12 inspectors are needed but Congress has refused to authorize them.

Abernethy angrily asked him if the District Commissioners had asked Congress for additiional in-

$10,000 Awarded To Every Ute For Seized Land

By The Associated Press

The Ute Indians of Colorado and Utah struck it rich yesterday.

The Utes—mostly poor, uneducated farmers—won a record-breaking $31,700,000 claim against the Government.

This amount represents about $10,000 for each Ute as payment for the six million acres of land the United States took from his ancestors.

The Court of Claims handed down four judgments. One of these was for $24,296,127, which lawyers say is the biggest judgment ever handed down against the Government. The three other judgments pushed the total up to $31,700,000.

Despite the court's ruling, they can't get their cash until Congress votes it.

Mobilization Of Industry Is Considered

Truman Indicates Calling Up of Guard; Other Steps May Be Expected Soon

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

President Truman said yesterday that neither food rationing nor a food shortage is in prospect and declared that hoarding is very foolish.

But he made it plain at his news conference that other steps usually associated with a war emergency—industrial mobilization, call of the National Guard and industrial controls, etc.—are under consideration by the Government.

The President expressed confidence about the hostilities in the Far East and declared our troops will hold onto Korea.

Asked if he could give any assurances "we are not getting the tar licked out of us," Mr. Truman said that's never happened to us and it won't happen this time.

Can we retain a foothold in Korea, a reporter asked. Replied the President: We can—as far north as the 38th parallel. That is the border between North and South Korea.

President Truman volunteered his comment about the food situation and asked that the newspapers call it especially to the attention of their subscribers.

Corn, Wheat Crops Large

In prospect, he said, is one of the largest corn crops we ever have had. A normal cotton crop is anticipated to augment three million bales in storage. The wheat crop this year and next likewise will be as big as last year.

Declaring there is nothing to worry about as far as food and things of that sort are concerned, Mr. Truman said he agreed with a statement earlier in the day by Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan that food price rises are partly due to profiteering.

But when reporters asked if his statement about food hoarding being foolish and unnecessary also applied to "consumer goods—like automobiles," Mr. Truman declined comment. He said he was talking only about things he knew about definitely.

Newsmen took this to mean that some attention was being given to the extent such things as autos and television sets might interfere with military production.

To all questions about plans for industrial mobilization, more defense money, call of the Guard and Reserves, the President replied that all things relating to the emergency are under consideration.

To Tell Congress, Public

At the proper time, he added, the necessary steps will be taken—if they are necessary. He made it plain that such decisions are actively under consideration and that he has in view going before Congress and the people to explain them when made.

Informed sources at the Pentagon said that some major White House announcements dealing with mobilization to meet the Korean

Only One in Ten Of One Group Had Ever Heard Fire From the Big Guns

By Homer Bigart
NYHT News Service

With American Forces in Korea, Friday, July 14.—During today's lull in the fighting, this correspondent talked with a number of line officers who had survived rough action north of the Kum River. Some of the bitterness had worn off. Men had had some sleep and a hot meal and were a bit more cheerful.

Here are some facts about a unit just relieved from the line:

Its field training had been so scant that this unit had barely finished battalion combat exercise. It had never engaged in regimental combat exercise.

Only one man out of 10 had ever heard the sound of a shell passing overhead. Overhead firing had been banned in peacetime maneuvers lest some of the men get hurt. As a result, these soldiers could not distinguish between supporting artillery and enemy artillery.

Reassurance Needed

Consequently they were unnerved by friendly shells whistling over their positions and needed frequent reassurance from platoon leaders who themselves were often green to combat.

Too many men deserted positions and ran when the action became warm. No one who has not learned to control his fear under shell fire has any right to criticize these men. But the fact remains that they ran, leaving gaps in the line that endangered men left behind.

An officer estimated that one fourth of his men were barely literate, having only the equivalent of a fifth-grade education. They were obliged to take a special study course in order to pass simple Army general clasification tests.

Some of these men may yet be converted into good combat material, but it is a little late in the game for that. Meanwhile, the only assured way of getting replacements with sufficient education is through the draft.

The 2½-year term of enlistment for soldiers overseas has proved too short to permit an adequate program for occupation units in Japan. By the time a unit finished a year's program it had to start all over again with basic training because nearly half of the men had completed their enlistment and were replaced with green recruits. Thus the units could hardly hope to get beyond regimental combat exercises.

The American troops were not combat-minded. En route to the front the men behaved as though they were on a Sunday outing. They had no indoctrination to prepare them for the raw brutality of combat. Suddenly they found themselves thrown into a full-scale war

Ruin Over Greater Chicago Area

'Hill' Unit Hints H-Bomb Goal: Flash Death Over 20-Mi. Radius

By the United Press

The Congressional Atomic Energy Committee last night hinted that this country hopes to produce a hydrogen bomb so powerful it could destroy a city as big as Chicago and its suburbs.

The awesome possibilities of the weapon were outlined in a carefully worded report prepared by the committee staff. Technically, it covered the problems raised by the dreaded H-bomb in efforts towards international control of atomic energy.

Actually, the pamphlet carried the most complete review of H-bomb problems and history yet issued by a Government agency. It discussed "triggering" of the bomb, ingredients involved, and supplies of raw materials.

The report carried few direct statements. It consisted largely of a list of questions—with no answers. What few direct statements were made cited no authority, but, as one committee member said:

"It is logical to assume there would not be a report on a project unless there was a basis for assuming the project to be feasible."

The report said it "might be possible" to construct an H-bomb whose blast damage in a 10-mile circle 20 miles in diameter would be comparable to the total destruction achieved in a one-mile circle at Hiroshima. "It has been stated that it might be a thousand times greater than that of a (plutonium) fission bomb," it added.

The pamphlet then quoted an article by atomic scientist Hans Bethe in which he states that the flash burn effect of the hydrogen bomb would be greater than its blast effect. He said the flash effect could cause "fatal burns" within a 20-mile circle, 40 miles in diameter.

"The inhabitants of Chicago and its suburbs could thus be wiped out," Bethe said.

The report summed up the "technical facts of the hydrogen bomb relevant to international control" as follows:

1. The H-bomb, "if it can be made to work," will release energy resulting from the fusion of light elements—a process believed to occur at the center of the sun and stars.

2. An atomic bomb of the present type would be needed to "trigger" the H-bomb. Technical difficulties of the "triggering" process account "for much of the uncertainty that exists whether hydrogen weapons are feasible."

3. The "heavy hydrogens" of deuterium and tritium—and not

MacArthur Calls Struggle Most Skillful Holding Action

Tokyo, July 13 (U.P.).—American soldiers in Korea are putting up one of the most heroic and skillful rear guard actions in history and their losses have been greatly exaggerated in uncensored reports from the front, Gen. Douglas MacArthur said tonight.

MacArthur said American ground forces had suffered fewer than 500 casualties in nearly three weeks of fighting, while inflicting much greater losses on the invading North Koreans, who in some instances have outnumbered GIs 20 to 1.

The American casualties included 42 killed, 190 wounded and 256 missing, he said. Many of the missing, he added, undoubtedly were men who got lost in the confusion of battle and will return eventually.

The supreme commander of Far Eastern forces issued a special communique at 11 p. m. (9 a.m. EDT) devoted entirely to denying the pessimistic news that has been flowing to the United States.

He attributed the kind of information Americans at home have been getting to the absence of censorship and to exaggerated, distorted stories by the wounded and "mentally shocked."

"Reports of warfare are at any time grisly and repulsive and reflect emotional strain normal to those unaccustomed to the sights and sounds of battle," MacArthur said.

These stories have been sent to the United States without interference from the Army, he said, as the result of an "experiment" being tried perhaps for the first time in modern combat. The experi-

Nehru Appeals To U. S., Stalin To Confine War

By Ferdinand Kuhn

Prime Minister Nehru of India intervened personally in Moscow and Washington yesterday to prevent the Korean war from spreading.

Moscow dispatches reported that the Indian Ambassador there had delivered a personal note from Nehru to Premier Joseph Stalin. Here in Washington, the Ambassador, Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, delivered a personal note from Nehru, her brother, to Secretary of State Acheson.

There was no way of knowing whether the notes were identical, and State Department officials declined to say what Nehru proposed. But the Indian leader is known to be worried for fear that the Korean fighting might explode into a World War.

He has not offered to mediate, it was learned last night, and he has not withdrawn India's support of the Security Council resolution of

'The End Will Be Victory'

Mac Arthur Accepts U. N. Flag As Mankind's Effort at Liberty

Tokyo (Friday), July 14 (U.P.)—Gen. Douglas MacArthur today received the blue-and-white flag of the United Nations to fly at headquarters of Allied forces fighting the Korean invasion.

Presentation of the banner, by United States Army Chief of Staff J. Lawton Collins, made complete MacArthur's designation as commander of all United Nations forces carrying out military sanctions against North Korea.

It was presented to MacArthur at noon (Tokyo time) in a brief, simple ceremony in MacArthur's office on the sixth floor of the impressive Dai Ichi Building.

"I accept this flag with deep emotion," MacArthur told Collins. "It symbolizes one of the greatest efforts man has ever made to free himself. The Far East Command will do its best to uphold this noblest of ideals."

MacArthur told Col. Alfred G. Katzin, U. N. Secretary General Trygve Lie's personal representative, to inform Lie that the U. N. efforts in Korea will be successful and "the end will be victory."

The ceremony took place only a few hundred yards from the palace of Emperor Hirohito, where the rising sun flew until only a few years ago over a Japan at war against the allies.

The U. N. flag was the same one which the late Count Folke Bernadotte and Ralph J. Bunche flew when they negotiated the Palestine peace for the U. N. It was flown to Tokyo by Collins and U. S. Air Chief of Staff Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg.

It is a comparatively small flag with a global design in faint white lines on a blue ground. The globe, with its continents outlined, is encircled by entwined olive branches.

Enemy Fails In His First Attempt to Cross River

Foe Also Checked By South Koreans On American Flank; 1 Unit Annihilated

Tokyo, Friday, July 14 (U.P.).—North Korean Communists made their first attempt to cross the Kum River today but were beaten back by tons of shells from American artillery.

The North Koreans, who had massed two divisions on the north bank, made three tries at sending strong patrols across in the predawn darkness, a front dispatch reported.

American Advanced Headquarters in Korea, Friday, July 14 (AP).—Red Korean artillery fired sporadic shells into the American Kum River line last night but the American sector "was generally quiet," a U. S. Headquarters spokesman said today.

Artillery and mortar fire indicated the Communists had pulled up in some force from Chochiwon, 20 air miles north of the key city of Taejon.

The spokesman said the South Korean army front to the east was generally stabilized and that one Communist company which broke through was "annihilated."

The spokesman reported continuous infiltration by North Ko-

East Coast 'Foe' Revealed as Unit Of Yank Artillery

Somewhere in Korea, July 13 (U.P.).—That wasn't a big North Korean concentration on the East Coast 10 to 40 miles north of Pohang—it was an American artillery unit, a spokesman said today.

Reports had been released here of a new, large enemy concentration in the area, a possible threat to the Pusan base in Southeastern Korea.

"There is no such concentration," the spokesman said. He explained that the presence of the American unit, at a point which he did not disclose, led to the erroneous report of a new enemy threat.

House Votes Aid To Schools in Federal Areas

The House passed and sent to the Senate yesterday a bill authorizing a program of annual Federal aid to school districts financially burdened because of Federal activities.

The program is estimated to cost 32 million dollars annually, an increase of 15 million dollars over what Federal agencies already are paying hard-pressed school districts.

The Federal help is to be used only for maintenance and operation of schools.

Civil Defense Program Bill For D. C. Gets House Approval

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

The House gave unanimous recognition yesterday to the need for a civilian defense program in the District after debating whether such a move was hysterical or necessary.

The House action was a unanimous voice vote approving a bill authorizing the civilian defense program to begin here. The measure goes to the Senate, while a House appropriations subcommittee today begins considering the $290,000 initial fund asked by the District Commissioners to begin the civil defense program.

Before voting on the bill, the House heard Representative Joseph P. O'Hara (R., Minn.) object sharply that the bill was "hysterical." But he did not vote against it.

Representatives John J. McMillan (D., S. C.) and Representative James W. Wadsworth (R., N. Y.) took the lead in urging approval of the bill.

In such a catastrophe, Wadsworth said, the police alone could not possibly handle the situation. He said it would require the cooperation of many other agencies, including all medical authorities and transportation authorities.

Representative John Phillips (R., Calif.) asked whether in such an emergency the Army would not take charge.

"It depends entirely upon the military situation," Wadsworth replied. "The Army may be completely employed elsewhere. Chicago or Cleveland might suffer a catastrophe with no Army anywhere near it."

Yanks Repel Enemy Trying Kum Crossing

rean soldiers in civilian clothes. He said "definite action" was being taken to seize suspects crossing allied lines.

Tokyo, Friday, July 14 (AP).—American artillery took North Korean troops under heavy fire Thursday night as the Reds moved into positions on the north bank of the Kum River.

Only a heavy downpour of rain provided cover for the Communist legions as they scrambled to dig in on a high level wall, a few hundred yards from entrenched United States positions on the south banks of the river.

[The United Press said the enemy troops had moved into position for an assault across the river which it said now is not more than waist deep in some places.—Editor's Note.]

Earlier Thursday the North Koreans launched two heavy attacks to the east against South Korean forces in the central sector in an effort to make a wide flanking movement against the defenders.

Allied warplanes struck sledgehammer blows before darkness fell, ranging from precision bombing at high level to close support of ground troops. Two B-29's were reported missing.

Red Tanks Ineffective

Front line dispatches said that under steady aerial pounding and artillery shelling, the Reds' Russian-built tanks had not been effective in action for two days.

A spokesman at an advance American headquarters said South Koreans backed up some, "but not much," in meeting the North Korean thrust to the east.

However, it appeared that the defense line had been dented by a Red operation that might threaten communications of Americans defending the Kum.

The Americans, having withdrawn southward across the Kum River, were holding new defense positions against infiltration or renewed attack by Korean Reds outnumbering them 20 to 1.

In the biggest single air assault of the war, nearly 50 B-29 Superfortresses dropped 500 tons of bombs on an enemy railroad center north of the thirty-eighth parallel, in the Red's rear area. The Far East Air Force reported one B-29 missing. A Washington Air Force announcement that a B-29 was lost on a mission Wednesday cause some uncertainty as to whether one or two of the big planes was lost. Far East Air Headquarters in Tokyo said some of the men may have survived.

The North Koreans' main striking force, which broke through to the area just north of the Kum River in the American sector, was quiet briefly and then started moving into positions tonight on the north bank. American artillery and mortars laid down a heavy barrage as the Reds occupied positions along the thick levee on the north bank.

This sector is east and west of the main highway bridge south of Chochiwon, front line reports said. Americans were well dug in just south of the river in this sector.

Associated Press Photographer Charles Gorry was at the river defenses when the Reds resumed their activity.

Meanwhile, North Korean troops in the Chungju sector to the east, approximately 55 air miles northeast of vital Taejon, began putting heavy pressure on the South Korean troops manning this area. Some North Korean armor was active south of Chungju as the Reds advanced in the general direction of Kumchon and Taegu.

The American spokesman did not reveal how far the Reds had advanced south of Chungju, but a deep penetration might endanger the main supply line to the American sector.

Earlier Thursday, the spokesman said Red columns of tanks, armored cars and infantry had moved 15 miles south of Chungju.

American and Australian light bombers and fighters shifted their attacks eastward to meet the new threat with close-in air support of South Korean ground forces.

General MacArthur identified the two North Korean divisions driving south in the central Chungju sector as the Fifth and Fifteenth—the latter composed of Korean veterans from Manchuria.

Concentrations at Seoul

Other North Korean units were reported concentrated at Seoul to add to the overwhelming numerical advantage the Communists already hold.

General MacArthur's Thursday midnight communique, No. 73, said enemy activity had been resumed after a lull in the Chungju-Tanyang area.

The communique said only there was "no change" in naval operations along both east and west coasts.

The enemy radio at Pyongyang broadcast a North Korea army communique Thursday night claiming general advances on all fronts, but it admitted Communist armies were receiving "severe resistance" in the air and on the ground.

General MacArthur's headquarters repeatedly has pointed out the threat of a major Red flanking move to cut the 130-mile-long American communications line between Taejon, the key U. S. advanced position and Pusan, main South Korean port where supplies and troops arrive from Japan. The communication line runs through Taegu, some 70 miles southeast of Taejon. Taegu is a vital rail and highway center.

B-29's struck a marshalling yard, four road intersections, two tanks and six barges. Fighters strafed and rocketed North Korean tanks, trucks, armored cars, vehicles, locomotives, railroad cars, warehouses and a bridge reported destroyed.

Other B-29s of the Far East bomber command smashed at enemy railroad and highway bridges.

The operations Friday were to be viewed by two of America's top military chiefs, Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, and Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Chief of the Airforces, were expected to make a brief inspection of the war front, returning to Tokyo within 24 hours.

AF Charters 63 Transports for Far East Airlift

The Air Force has contracted for the charter of 63 four-engine transport planes from commercial airlines to add to its airlift to the Far East, it was disclosed yesterday.

The airlines have already made 33 of the planes available, expect to have 9 ready for trans-Pacific flights within two weeks, and will furnish 21 others as soon as possible.

Most of the transport planes are DC-4 Skymasters, known in the Air Force as C-54s. Each plane can carry 50 men and their packs or a comparable amount of cargo.

Nehru Appeals to U. S., Stalin

June 27, which called for military and other help to South Korea.

India's government has been trying in Western capitals and in Moscow, and presumably also in Communist China, where India has an ambassador to "localize" the fighting in Korea. In other words, he wants assurances from both the Russians and the Chinese Communists that they would not send troops to help the North Koreans.

Nehru also wants some "inducements" offered to the Russians to end their boycott and come back into the United Nations. He has argued with Western diplomats that this should be done without loss of face to the Russians.

His method would be to bring Communist China into the U. N. as quickly as possible, and thereby end the Soviet excuse for staying away. The United States stated again this week, through Ambassador Phillip C. Jessup, that it would not use its veto to prevent such action, although it would cast its own vote against it.

Officials in Washington showed much interest in Nehru's intervention. He not only has great moral influence in Asia, but his country is the most important one with an ambassador in regular contact with the Chinese Communist leaders.

But there was little belief that his move would get anywhere. Nehru has been denounced in Moscow as a "lackey" of the West, especially because he supported the United Nations resolution. And in Washington the feeling is that the only sure way to "localize" the fighting in Korea is for the Communists to stop it.

Russia May Demand Korean Withdrawal

Moscow, July 13 (AP)—Prime Minister Nehru of India has sent a personal message to Prime Minister Stalin.

(In Stockholm tonight Premier Einar Gerhardsen of Norway called on the Soviet Union to help stop the war.)

Earlier today in Moscow some foreign diplomats expressed the opinion the Soviet Union wants to see a peaceful settlement of the Korean conflict.

These diplomats say the recent conversations between British Ambassador Sir David Kelly and Gromyko support such an opinion.

The Russian price, the informants say, probably would be the withdrawal of United States troops and any other foreign troops from the Korean Peninsula. Moscow also is said to want general elections in both north and south Korea to elect a single government for the whole peninsula.

They say the Army learns from adversities. It should be learning plenty here.

Truman, Acheson Commend Muccio, Envoy to Korea

President Truman and Secretary of State Dean Acheson yesterday commended John J. Muccio, United States Ambassador to Korea, for courageous performance of duty.

Acheson cabled Muccio this message:

"The President has asked me to extend to you and to your staff his appreciation and commendation for your courageous and effective performance duty since the onset of the present emergency in Korea.

"Your prompt and accurate reporting of the situation, the dispatch and efficiency with which you carried out the evacuation of the many American citizens for whom you were responsible, and the confidence which you have inspired in the face of the unprovoked aggression against Korea are in the finest tradition of the foreign service."

No Food Rationing, Says Truman; Some Controls Likely

crisis and world situation generally can be expected next week.

They predicted they would include: (1) partial mobilization of the National Guard — perhaps a couple of divisions or more; (2) more extensive use of the draft to build up the Regular Army and fill out the Guard units called in—now at half strength; (3) shift of additional Regular Army combat forces to the Far East; (4) enlargement of the Air Force, Navy and Marines; (5) a request for additional appropriations—well over a billion dollars—for additional planes and weapons and to pay for the expanded forces.

A final decision on what to do may await the return of Gens. J. Lawton Collins and Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Army and Air Force chiefs of staff, now in the Far East for conferences with General MacArthur and a first-hand view of the combat situation in Korea.

President Can Take Plants

Some mobilization steps, however, could come even sooner. One move in view is the invoking of Section 18 of the Selective Service Act. This gives the President broad powers to require industry to give priority to defense orders. He can take over any plant refusing to comply with Government requests for priorities.

The draft act also gives the President authority to allocate steel production to military needs.

Another move already afoot is the speedup of aircraft production. The Senate Armed Services Committee yesterday passed a resolution declaring:

"In view of the present critical Korean situation and the threatening situation throughout the world, it is the opinion of the Senate Committee on Armed Services that the military establishment should immediately give consideration to accelerating the delivery of planes on order to the maximum extent necessary."

Meetings Are Under Way

Later in the day, the Department of Defense announced that representatives of the Air Force, Navy and aircraft companies are now meeting to discuss plans for stepping up delivery schedules "on certain aircraft production contracts which were let prior to the Korean crisis."

These are believed to involve for the most part tactical aircraft required for the Korean fighting. Aviation industry sources said Republic Aircraft—makers of the F-84 Thunderjet, the principal close support weapon of the Air Force—has been laying off employes recently due to production schedules running out.

Senator Millard Tydings (D., Md.), chairman of the Armed Services Committee, told reporters after hearing top Defense chiefs behind closed doors on the Korean question:

"There is no prospect of a quick campaign of a few weeks, even if no new enemy forces are thrown into the fighting."

Tydings said the Korean situation "remains extremely serious—not threatening, but serious." He said his committee's resolution on aircraft production was not critical of the Defense forces but aimed at assuring them of their backing in stepping up aircraft deliveries. Such action would require more money.

The group heard Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, chief of naval operations, in executive session. Earlier, they had similar testimony from Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Tydings praised the Navy for its operations and said it had a bigger job than other forces because of the distances covered.

While the Marylander indicated that any decision as to controls over manpower and materials would not be made by Administration officials for several weeks, Chairman Burnet Maybank (D., S. C.), of the Senate Banking Committee thought action should come sooner. Maybank, whose committee would handle such legislation, said he had had no word from the White House in the matter but felt the "grim situation" might require action.

Lyndon Johnson Asks Speed

Another member of the Senate Armed Service Committee, Senator Lyndon Johnson (D., Tex.), urged speed in achieving an all-out war production.

"We are still geared for a cheap, quick war in Korea," he declared. "Although it is plainly apparent that this will be at best a costly, prolonged operation. Further hesitation is unjustified."

The Texan said we should take these specific actions now: (1) Step up deliveries of warplanes now on order, regardless of cot; (2) pull combat and supply vessels out of mothballs with maximum speed; (3) stop "haggling over prices and specifications" and quickly build up the stockpile of critical materials; (4) put more synthetic rubber and other critical sandby plans back ino operation.

The question of home-front mobilization is expected to be discussed at today's Cabinet meeting.

No mention was made at the President's news conference about further draft calls, but it was evident that this was included in his statement that all things dealing with the emergency are under consideration.

Situation Always Changing

An Army spokesman yesterday said the Department has "no present plans" for a second call, but cautioned that the situation is constantly changing. Well-informed Pentagon sources say another and larger draft call is in prospect. It would bring men into uniform by October.

The House Armed Services Committee called General Bradley before it next Tuesday. Among other things they want to know if the Department of Defense feels the draft law should be changed. The present law, limiting the Army to 837,000 men, would prevent any sizeable mobilization of the National Guard, along with a bigger flow of inductees.

Some Congressmen also want to ask Bradley if the Department favors removing the present bar on drafting war veterans—except in actual war-time.

At his press conference, President Truman was asked if he still called the Korea fighting a "police action." He replied that that was what it was. After the President declared his confidence that American forces will drive the Reds back of the Thirty-eighth Parallel, he was asked if that meant we won't "carry the police action north of the parallel."

Mr. Truman said he'd make that decision when we come to it. Are we prepared to resist aggression everywhere in the world as we are doing in Korea? Such a situation will have to be met as it develops, he replied.

Before seeing the press and radio men, the President met with the National Security Council to survey the situation. White House Press Secretary Charles G. Ross said the top strategy group will meet once a week from now on.

Mr. Truman's statement that there is no food shortage and there will be no rationing, followed a morning conference with Agriculture Secretary Brannan.

Brannon told reporters afterwards he felt that profiteering in food has started as a result of the war, but declined to comment on what can or should be done about it.

He said there is not a single physical justification for food hoarding and none for sudden increases in food prices.

800 Russian Craft, 70 Subs, Near Korea

By The Associated Press

Russia is believed to have an assorted collection of about 800 naval craft deployed near the Korean war area—including between 70 and 80 submarines.

Naval sources here figure that perhaps a third of this school of submarines are the new XXI snorkels.

There is no present evidence that the armada comprises anything like a balanced naval force. Many of the vessels are small craft and nothing bigger than cruisers is believed to be in the area.

So far as can be determined, the Russians still possess no aircraft carriers.

One unknown factor seems to be how many of the smaller vessels may be landing craft or types that could be used in emergency for an amphibious operation.

Landing craft could be used to provide an amphibious "lift" for North Korean flanking operations down the South Korean coast lines. Or they might some day be used in an attempted operation against the American defense bastion in Japan, should Russia and the United States fall into gloves-off war.

However, it is the submarine force that is drawing most United States attention.

As deployed, the Red sub fleet in the Far East seems to have as its main job the potential duty of cutting the Asiatic-Indonesian lifeline along which the United States would send help in event of general war in the Orient.

An almost equally important mission is to carry on reconnaissance of American and British naval ships, transport ship and air movement in the western Pacific and the inland seas bordering eastern Asia.

If there have been any sightings of suspicious actions by Russian submarines in those waters, the Pentagon has kept it secret.

Bases used by the Red sub fleet are believed to include the excellent ports of Darien, in Manchuria, on the Yellow Sea; harbors on Sakhalin Island, directly to the north of Japan; the big base of Vladivostok; Okhotsk, a port in the northwest corner of the sea of the same name; naval installations along the Kamchatka peninsula and to the north along the Siberian mainland.

The latter two areas face, at easy cruising range, the United States' Aleutian Islands, the outermost of which Japan seized easily at the beginning of World War II.

Russia's Far Eastern submarine fleet is part of a total force estimated to run as high as 350 submersibles of types ranging from old wartime models to the latest snorkels.

5th Regiment

Marine Unit Loaded for Korean War

San Diego, Calif., July 13 (AP).—Grim-faced and solemn, Marines of the Fifth Regiment embarked aboard the transport Henrico here today as the First Marine Division completed loading operations preparatory to sailing for the Korean war zone.

Wearing combat fatigue clothes and carrying camouflaged battle packs and rifles, the Marines, many of them battle-toughened veterans of World War II, arrived at the naval station docks in buses from Camp Pendleton.

Lieut. Gen. Lemuel C. Shepherd, commander of the Fleet Marine Force Pacific, greeted the Marines as they filed aboard the transport a platoon at a time to the strains of the Marine Corps hymn.

"I just came from Tokyo," General Shepherd told the Leathernecks. "I can tell you the people there are damn glad to see you coming. We have a job to do out there. I know you men can do it."

Brig. Gen. E. A. Craig, who will command the Marine units overseas, was equally confident of the men.

Gen. Clifton B. Bates, Marine Corps commandant, also was here to witness the loading aboard the Henrico. Two other transports stood by ready to take on more troops. Wives, mothers and sisters stood in small groups near the bows of big gray transports that were swallowing up their men.

To most of them, seeing the Leathernecks off to war had happened many times before, but that fact didn't make it any easier. Not a dry eye was noted among them.

Yanks' Losses 'Exaggerated'

ment, he said, was that of avoiding military censorship or undue restriction of the movement of correspondents.

"Probably the most flagrant of these exaggerated reports dealt with the so-called 'lost battalion' of the Thirty-fourth Infantry, which was reported as being completely annihilated, whereas its actual losses amounted to only two killed, seven wounded, and 12 missing," MacArthur said.

"American ground units in Korea are fighting one of the most skillful and heroic holding and rear-guard actions in history. Their excellent peacetime training is reflected in the combat record they now are compiling."

MacArthur said the GIs have been overwhelmingly outnumbered, but have given the enemy much punishment anyway.

Flier Killed, 8 Other Casualties Are Listed

Korean war casualty list No. 19 today reported the death in action of Air Force Staff Sgt. Robert W. Fluke. He was the son of Mrs. Alma W. Fluke, Southgate, Calif. He originally was reported missing in flight on July 2.

The Defense Department identified six Army wounded and two injured in its latest casualty list. The latest casualties were:

WOUNDED: Pvt. Lee E. W. Davis, husband of Mrs. Catherine Davis, Route 1, Wilmore, Ky.

Pvt. Jose C. Lopez, son of Leonides Lopez, P. M., Chamisal, N. W.

Cpl. Gerald C. May, jr., son of Mrs. Dorothy V. May, Alameda, Calif.

Sergt. Clyde D. Smith, son of Mrs. Clyde D. Smith, Route 6, Celina, O.

Pfc. Virgil L. Snyder, brother of Odis Snyder, Mason City, Ill.

Pfc. Harry L. Spurlock, grandson of Mrs. Sally A. Short, Route 2, Rose Hill, Va.

INJURED: Pfc. Douglas A. Middleton, son of Mrs. Josephine Middleton, Route 1, Fort Edward, N. Y.

Rep. Magee Offers To Serve in Korea

Representative Magee (D., Mo.), veteran of two world wars and one of 14 to vote against the "security risk" bill, yesterday said he has volunteered for active duty in Korea.

"I can't stay in Congress and vote to send millions of other Americans to fight, as I think we will, unless I go too," Magee said.

Fifty-one years old, Magee is a freshman Representative.

are almost exactly like those of the Americans.

As American troops have learned from disastrous experience, many of the seemingly innocent white-garbed Korean farmers who wave to American troops in the daytime change at night into gun-bearing soldiers.

Kim, who was reported by the Communist radio as having been executed as a war criminal, formerly was police chief of Seoul, the South Korean capital now in Communist hands. He said reports from his agents showed that Russian advisers have taken over Seoul's Banto Hotel, which once served the American military and where the Economic Cooperation Administration later had headquarters.

The police chief told of many detailed reports of Soviet participation in the war, insisting that reliable testimony from captured North Korean prisoners of war indicated that Russian nationals are driving North Korean tanks.

"I can't, of course, actually prove this till we have captured a tank," the police chief said, "but you will see that I am right."

Japs Fight Too, He Says

The police chief also stated that prisoner-of-war interrogations showed that Chinese nationals and Japanese (former prisoners captured by the Russians during World War II), are fighting for the North Krean side.

He added, with a twinkle, that South Koreans are somewhat puzzled as to why American planes strafe the American lines.

This problem was on the mind of another front-line observer—Lieut. Arnold Riverdal, 28, of Mason City, Iowa, a tactical air control officer.

"The troops are so mad at the Air Force that this is no place for a pilot, I guess," Lieutenant Riverdal said. He explained away the strafing—this correspondent has been strafed three times in as many days by American planes—by saying that jets are too speedy for close ground support in the rugged mountainous terrain of Korea. It is hard for them to distinguish targets, he said.

"What we need for close-in support are our slower tested planes, like the F-47, or even the Mustang," the lieutenant said.

There is not a front-line GI who disagrees.

U. S. Arranges Screening for Offers of Help

The State and Defense Departments yesterday set up a committee to screen and accept offers of help from the various United Nations for the U. N. forces fighting in Korea.

The committee will work with the U. N. and with Gen. Douglas MacArthur to make certain that offers of military, economic and financial aid are directed into proper channels.

Livingston T. Merchant, deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, will be the State Department representative. Navy Capt. Albert C. Murdaugh will represent the Defense Department.

Officials said the committee was established because some countries are making offers of help directly to the United States. They did not disclose these nations have offered to send any ground troops to Korea.

Pakistan Has Made No Offer of Troops

Karachi, Pakistan, July 13 (AP).—Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan said today he had "no information regarding the sending of Pakistani land troops to Korea."

Returning from a tour of the United States and Canada, he said, however, that Pakistan would help South Korea in all ways within its means. He said the shape of this aid would be determined as time shows what is needed.

Senator Benton (D., Conn.) suggested in Washington this week that the Philippines and Pakistan send detachments to the Korean front to demonstrate that the fight there is not a white man's imperialist war.

Ferguson Urges 'Act of War' Brand on Soviet Aid to Korea

A proposal that the United Nations confront Russia with a firm declaration that aid, direct or indirect, to the North Korean Reds will be considered "an act of war" against members of the UN was voiced yesterday by Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.).

The Republican Senator suggested that the United States take the lead in securing such action by the United Nations.

Ferguson said he believed that the freedom-loving nations of the world should serve immediate notice on Russia that further attempts at world domination would be met by military action from the United Nations.

Would Bleed Foes, He Says

He said he was convinced that Russia, already well launched on its program of world conquest, is seeking only to bleed white its opponents in side skirmishes while building up its own strength before entering into the final phase of a third world war.

Instead of sitting back and allowing their strength to be seeped away, Ferguson declared, the freedom-loving nations should be united in firm purpose to stop any aggression at once.

The Michigan Senator's speech was a reflection of the major question that troubles most members of Congress on both sides of the aisle—how to get at the problem of Rusian aggression directly and immediately before the world is hurled into further chaos with Soviet-inspired battles in satellite nations.

"The United States should declare that American security and the peace of the world demands an immediate announcement that the United States refuses any longer to be pushed from pillar to post by Russian strategy in a war of nerves and attrition," Ferguson said.

Urges Declaration

"We should declare as we ask the United Nations to declare, in plain terms, that we are well aware of the real source of most of the repeated crises and emergencies and that we shall go to the root of the trouble which is the governing authority of the USSR.

"We have no quarrel with the Russian people, but we shall not stand idly by while their men in the Kremlin threaten the security of the United States and destroy the peace of the world.

"We should announce in the strongest language that if the Security Council delays or does not approve the proposed resolutions, and that if it transpires that manpower, arms and implements of war are being given to North Korea or to any other area for warlike purposes by the USSR, the United States in defense of its own interests and security under Article 51 of the United Nations Charter will take such direct action as its best judgment dictates."

Envoy Chang Says Korean Attempt By Reds Has Failed

Harrisburg, Pa., July 13 (AP).—Dr. John M. Chang, South Korea ambassador to the United States, declared tonight that "regardless of the present course of battle, the Communist attempt in Korea has already failed."

"The Communists were aiming for quick victory—success so sudden and so complete that neither the United Nations nor the United States would have time to intervene," Dr. Chang said.

"Their effort failed dismally," he added, noting that within 15 hours the United Nations had acted and the United States had started military supplies to Korea.

'Willing, Expendable,' Is Reservist's Reply

One taciturn Air Force Reserve officer, wasting few words, responded to the plea for reservists to return to active duty with this wire to the Pentagon:

"Willing, dependable and expendable. Say where and when."

Rules Drafted For Censorship Of War Moves

The Defense Department yesterday clamped a censorship on the release of information about troop movements to the Korean war theater.

Military officers were instructed not to tell when a unit is transferring, its sailing date, its strength or its equipment.

The new rules apply only to the military in giving out information. The Government has no control over publication of news. There is no Federal censorship law except that governing certain phases of atomic energy.

Text of the Johnson memorandum:

1. Preparations for military operations or movements within the continental United States are subject to the following restrictions:

(a) Ultimate destination of unit alerted: refer to theater only, i. e., the Far East Command.

(b) Designation of unit: Release numerical designation only when unit is of division size or larger. Numerical designation of units below division level will not be released. Air Force group designations will not be released. Nondivisional units will be referred to in general as a combat unit, a supporting unit, etc., of the continental Army concerned, which have been alerted for movement.

(c) Status of equipment: not releasable.

(d) Strength: Not releasable.

(e) Date of movement from present location: Not releasable.

(f) Sailing time of transports from port of embarkation: Not releasable.

2. Movements of naval vessels and transport or cargo ships from the West Coast may be mentioned after departure but no mention may be made of movements west of Pearl Harbor. Photographs of loadings, sailings and reactivation operations of naval vessels may be used within normal security limits imposed by the local commander.

3. Within the Far East Command the following restrictions have been imposed by CINCFE (Commander in Chief, Far East):

(a) Reports naming specific units, sizes, places of landing, locations and troop movements may not be disclosed until officially announced.

(b) Subordinate headquarters, movements, units committee (except Eighth Army, Fifth Air Force, Twentieth Air Force, Seventh Fleet, etc.) or any field locations may not be mentioned until officially announced.

4. Military forces of the United Nations acting in cooperation with United States forces should be safeguarded in accordance with the foregoing.

2 Korean Regimes Promise To Observe Atrocity Rules

Lake Success, July 13 (AP).—The U. N.-sponsored Republic of Korea and the Communist North Korean regime both have promised to observe the Geneva conventions against atrocities, reports received at the U. N. said today.

The South Korean Republic officially said its soldiers are strictly carrying out the government's order to adhere to the Geneva conventions. This replied to an appeal from U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie that both sides observe the rules of warfare.

The Pyongyang radio announced in a broadcast heard in Tokyo that North Korea is sending Lie a message agreeing to comply with his request to treat prisoners humanely. The official text has not yet reached Lake Success.

Earlier this week, unofficial accounts from the battlefield said 18 American prisoners had been bound and shot and that a South Korean rifleman had broken the backs of captive guerillas.

Ben C. Limb, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the South Korean regime, informed Lie the South Koreans expect the arrival of a Red Cross representative soon. A Washington dispatch said, however, that Maj. Fred Bieri, a Red Cross representative, already is inspecting operations in South Korea.

Recruiting Stations Here Open 7 Days

Major Army recruiting stations in the District and seven surrounding States have been ordered on a seven-day week, it was learned last night.

A Second Army headquarters spokesman at Fort Meade said the boom in recruiting to meet the crisis in Korea led to the new order.

Some of the small recruiting offices manned by one or two men will remain closed Sundays. The Second Army area embraces Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky and Delaware.

The spokesman said area recruiters were doing a rush business in applicants, but many were physically or otherwise disqualified.

In Washington, however, all three services reported that smarter, healthier and younger men are showing up in increasing numbers.

The Navy found 15 solid prospects among 32 applicants, a much better percentage than has hitherto been reported.

Most of the solid ones, officers said, are 17-year-olds "who want to get it over with."

The Marines bagged four "certains" and 11 "probables" from among 50 prospects yesterday. "We're getting quality instead of quantity," said Sergt. Nick Gledich, a Marine recruiting officer.

Army and Air Force recruiting officers reported that 55 men applied for enlistment and agreed that the material was improving considerably.

The Coast Guard was averaging 35 to 40 applicants a day, was accepting about one out of 10, and was filling its comparatively small quota easily.

Navy recruiters said their small staff, in addition to handling enlistments, was being "swamped" by candidates for commissions.

So far this week, 267 men have dropped around to inquire about gold braid. Only 111 were given applications, however, the others being immediately turned away for lack of proper qualifications.

The Marines will swear in the first batch of recruits since Korean war today. Following the ceremony, the recruits will head for Parris Island, S. C., for boot training.

70 From D. C. in 1-A
Report to Army July 24

The District Selective Service System yesterday announced that 70 men classified as 1-A will be ordered to report for physical examinations at Fort Myer on July 24.

Thereafter, 70 more 1-A's will be similarly examined each Monday, Wednesday and Friday until the District meets its current draft call quota of 101. Frank Norton, local deputy draft chief, figures 400 men will have to be called up to produce the quota.

In Richmond, Col. Asher Harman, State director of Selective Service, said that some 1800 men will be called up for physical exams to meet the State quota of 435. Residents of nearby Virginia will also take their preinduction physical exams at Fort Myer.

Tentative plans for the opening of pre-induction processing stations in four Virginia areas were announced by the Virginia Military District.

The stations will handle the 1800 men to be called for examination. The station will be set up in the Army and Air Force recruiting stations in Richmond, Roanoke, Bristol and Arlington. Processing will extend over a period of 12 working days, from July 25 to August 5.

Pre-induction processing will consist of mental tests and physical examinations, including X-rays and blood tests. In most cases, men will be processed and returned to their homes the same day. The Government will provide transportation and meals.

If a man is found physically and mentally qualified and is ordered for induction, he will have at least 21 days before reporting.

Hickenlooper Asks Hearings On McCarthy's New Charges

Senator Hickenlooper (R., Iowa) demanded yesterday that the Senate Communist inquiry be reopened for a look into Senator McCarthy's latest charges—accusations the State Department termed false and distorted.

The charges by the Wisconsin Republican are based on material he said proves the department hired men in 1946 to strip its personnel files of derogatory information about other employes.

A State Department statement accused McCarthy of "a characteristic distortion of facts."

There was no indication that Hickenlooper's demand for an inquiry into McCarthy's new charges would be heeded by the Democratic majority of a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee. Hickenlooper is one of the two Republican members of that group, which for four months investigated McCarthy's contentions that the State Department has Communists and fellow travelers on its payroll.

McCarthy produced four statements signed by men he said the State Department hired four years ago. They told of being directed to destroy all data in personnel files of a damaging nature to other employes.

In reply, the department said the 1946 removal of documents was a thorough-going reorganization of personnel records made necessary by the influx of several thousand employes who were transferred from wartime agencies.

The department stressed that the records dealt with personnel and had nothing to do with loyalty and security files. Those files the department added, "were and are separately maintained in a security division wholly removed from the personnel operation."

The department also said that to the best of its knowledge the personnel files were not destroyed, "except in the case of such materials as duplicate documents, routine office transmittal sheets, superceded forms, etc."

As for the signed statements describing the nature of the 1946 files operation, the department said those documents McCarthy produced were "based on a misunderstanding or lack of information" regarding what was to be done with material taken from the personnel folders.

The department reiterated that in every case the inquiry committee has recived complete loyalty files."

Hickenlooper told reporters, however, that McCarthy's new charges are "a startling revelation of file-tampering, assuming the integrity of those who signed the statements."

"normal hydrogen" — are the fundamental ingredients of the H-bomb.

4. Deuterium can be obtained by "conventional industrial operations."

5. Tritium may be produced by nuclear reactors already available through neutron bombardment of lithium.

Lithium Deposits

The report added that commercial deposits of lithium are known to exist in the Black Hills of North Dakota, northern New Mexico, Saskatchewan, Canada, and Southwest Africa. Production of ores is now about 200 tons annually, it said.

In a foreword, the staff said:

"It should be emphasized that the original United States proposals and the existing United Nations plan foresee and carefully take into account the possibility of an H-bomb, as evidenced by the language they contain."

The report raised a number of questions as to the military effectiveness of the H-bomb. It quoted atomic physicist Harold Urey as believing it to be "militarily decisive." It noted that Dr. Robert F. Bacher, a former AEC commissioner, said its effectiveness has been "grossly overrated in the minds of laymen."

Red Underground Activities Rising, FBI Says

United States Communists have increased their underground operations during the past year, FBI director J. Edgar Hoover said yesterday. The result, he said, is the heaviest work load his agency ever has handled.

In an annual review of FBI activities for the fiscal year which ended June 30, Hoover said the number of investigations involving internal security and national defese is at a record level, exceeding the volume of similar work during the World War II years.

"The increased work load," the report said, "stems from the activities of the Communist party."

"Increased security consciousness on the part of the party leadership has brought about decentralization of party administrative machinery and transferal of previously open operations to an underground apparatus.

"These developments have complicated the FBI task of maintaining coverage of Communist activity."

The FBI director recently asked Congress for more than 300 additional agents, saying they were required principally for internal security investigations.

The annual report showed 8921 convictions in FBI cases of all kinds during the 1950 fiscal year, a six percent increase over 1949.

Hoover said that in line with previous years, 96.9 percent of all trials growing out of FBI inquiries resulted in convictions.

From Representative Stefan (R., Neb.), came a demand that Congress or the President take steps to round up "a lost battalion" of subversive aliens he said are "roaming at large in this country."

Stefan told a reporter that a recent check with the Immigration Service revealed that 102 criminal and subversive aliens from "Iron Curtain" countries are at large in the United States because they can't be deported or jailed.

Stefan said the whereabouts of at least 20 of the 102 are not known, although "it is generally known that they are well financed."

Asked about the Steffan statement, the Justice Department called attention to the recommendations which Tom Clark made, when Attorney General, in May of last year.

Clark asked that Congress give the Attorney General power to keep subversive and criminal aliens in jail in cases where they have been ordered deported and have been unable to get entry papers into another country. A bill providing for such procedure is still pending in Congress.

Vital Reasons Stay U. S. Hand In A-Bombing

By the United Press

Why doesn't the United States use its most deadly weapon, the atomic bomb, to blast the North Korean Communists and end the war quickly?

There are potent military and diplomatic reasons for not using it.

The military contends A-bombs are too precious to waste on the small-fry targets.

The diplomats fear that world opinion, now overwhelmingly on the United States' side, will be alienated if this country resorts too readily to atomic warfare.

A-bombs are still relatively scarce and enormously expensive. United States military leaders long ago determined no nation at war can afford to expend its atomic arsenal on anything but "priority" targets.

Strategically, the bomb is to be used on large industrial centers that are the backbone of the enemy's war production. Tactically, it may be used on very large troop concentrations, such as might occur if Russia massed armies for a lunge into western Europe.

North Korea's factory towns are not the arsenal of its war machine, which is being supplied for the most part by Russia. Thus it is doubtful whether strategic A-bombing would greatly shorten the war.

Stefan Urges Roundup of 'Subversives'

Representative Karl Stefan (R., Neb.) said yesterday more than 100 "criminal subversives and Communist aliens" in the United States should be clapped into a concentration camp.

He said in a statement the U. S. Immigration Service informed him it does not know the whereabouts of "at least 20" of the group.

"Most of them are on parole or on bond," he said, "but many have aliases and some may have changed their names. These subversive alien criminals, along with about 200 other alien criminals, have been ordered deported but passports or landing permits cannot be obtained from the countries of their origin."

Stefan urged congressional approval of a bill to permit placing "these dangerous alien criminals in a concentration camp."

The House Committee on Un-American Activities was told, meanwhile, that Communists "spearheaded" a strike at the Powell Valve Co., Cincinnati, in February, 1941, to disrupt the Navy's submarine building program. The plant was described as the bottleneck in the Navy's construction program.

The testimony was given by John J. Edmiston of Dayton, Ohio, former FBI undercover agent who joined the Communist Party in 1940-41 to spy on its activities. The committee is investigating communism in Ohio.

He said the U. S. Communist Party financed printing of 100,000 copies of "Soviet Power" by Hewlett Johnson, the "Red Dean" of Canterbury, in a campaign to promote Communist membership in rural areas, particularly among clergymen.

Edmiston gave the committee a list of names of persons he said were Communist Party members active in Ohio 10 years ago.

Among them were Alexander Trachtenberg, formerly of New York and now active in the West Coast Communist movement; Gus Hall, Cincinnati Communist organizer; Lowell Watkins, Ohio president of the Workers Alliance; Margaret Kline, curator of the Taft Museum and treasurer of the Communist Party, and Bernard Schmidt, a member of the old Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Citizens Warned Not To Sign Peace Petition

The House Un-American Activities Committee yesterday warned Americans they may be blackmailed for years if they innocently sign a "peace petition" which the committee called a piece of "Communist chicanery."

The committee charged in a statement that the petition—said to contain one million names already—is really intended to open the way for a planned campaign of civil disobedience and defiance of the Government "in the interests of the war effort of a foreign power."

Vote Expected Today On Hastie Nomination

The Senate Judiciary Committee concluded closed-door hearings yesterday on the nomination of William H. Hastie to be a Federal Appeals Court judge and said it may vote today.

The one-time Federal District judge and former Governor of the Virgin Islands testified at morning and afternoon sessions.

One committee member said his testimony concerned reports that Hastie belonged to a number of "Communist front" organizations. He refused to elaborate.

Bond Is Denied In Morford Contempt Case

The Court of Appeals yesterday denied bond to Richard Morford, executive director of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, pending appeal of his contempt of Congress conviction.

Morford was sentenced last week by District Court Judge James W. Morris to serve three months in jail and pay a fine of $250.

Judge Morris delayed execution of that sentence for 14 days to allow Morford an opportunity to ask the Court of Appeals for bond pending appeal.

Morford was convicted after he failed in 1946 to produce names and records concerning his organization to the House Un-American Activities Committee.

No Early Tax Boost Likely, George Says; Senate Committee Shelves Excise Cut Bill

NYHT News Service

No immediate increase in taxes is in sight, "even if the situation does not improve in Korea," Senator Walter F. George (D., Ga.), chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, predicted yesterday.

He said he thought Congress would have time to consider increases in its January session.

On the basis of recommendations, urgently pressed by Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder in behalf of the Administration, George indicated that the House bill, with its cutbacks of $1,010,000,000 in wartime excise taxes, will not be reported now by the Finance Committee.

He added, however, that he was not "closing the door" wholly to some reductions in excise levies if the Korea situation should clear. The bill is "not dead," he insisted, despite the contrary view taken in the White House and the Treasury and the consensus of members of the Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee.

Later, at a news conference, President Truman backed up the Snyder recommendations. Asked whether he thought wartime excise taxes should be retained now in view of the new crisis, the President referred his questioner to the statement issued Wednesday by the Secretary and said he had approved it.

Mr. Truman added that he had no tax plans beyond that statement.

Announcing that the hearings on the House-approved tax bill in the Finance Committee had been "closed" with yesterday's testimony, George told the committee it would be "unwise" to press the tax legislation at this time.

Secretary Snyder did not go into the possibilities of tax increases, George said, but rather pointed out the "disturbance" the proposed tax reforms would cause in the Treasury's revenue machinery.

Big Newsprint Source Seen in Reprocess Plant

House investigators were told yesterday this country can obtain up to 500,000 tons of newsprint annually by reprocessing yesterday's newspapers.

F. B. Oldman, president of the American Industrial Co., Buffalo, N. Y., testified before a House monopoly subcommittee investigating the newsprint shortage.

He said a group of publishers already has set up a plant at Gary, Ind., to use a process developed by his firm, and that other groups are negotiating for the process.

Oldman explained that the process removes the ink from used newsprint and reconverts the fiber into clean, fresh paper.

'Bust-With-Boom' Advocated

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Charlottesville, Va., July 13.—In a hell-to-breakfast denunciation of the welfare state and all its works, a United States Chamber of Commerce official today appealed for mixing up of a little "bust" with the present boom.

Clem D. Johnson, a vice-president of the Chamber, told the University of Virginia Institute on Public Affairs that although he wouldn't argue that depressions were a good thing, he implied that the Federal Government's efforts to forestall economic declines were worse.

Boom-bust cycles, he argued, "are a sort of rhythmic pulsation, the one a natural and proper corrective of the other."

Preventing a bust, at the cost of running a multi-billion dollar Federal deficit, even in a prosperous year like 1949 was equivalent to tying down the safety valve, said Johnson, a Roanoke, Va., business executive.

The welfare state ideal of the present, Johnson said, is destroying American free enterprise and initiative, "betraying our ideals" and leading to a "continuing drift to the left and a continuing retreat before the forces of communism."

Contributors to that deterioration, he said, are those who believe in socialized medicine, compulsory pensions and retirement for those over 60, and limitation of the farmer's right to plant.

Decrying equally the present search for economic security, and the Government's taxation policy designed to enhance the security, Johnson said:

"Our Government has become frankly predatory. It is stealing the savings of the thrifty." And in consequence drying up the sources of investment capital.

Johnson's thesis came in for a bit of roughing up at a panel discussion that followed.

America never had the kind of "let me alone" Government that Johnson was advocating, Economics Professor Raymond Pinchbeck of the University of Richmond argued. Even Adam Smith never witnessed it, Pinchbeck said; he just dreamed it.

Michael Ross, international affairs director of CIO, contended that from the first cave dweller, man's search had been toward security. Granted, that this may be debilitating — the cave man who built a shelter from the wind was henceforth less able to withstand the wind — nevertheless this has been man's choice in values—and still remains so, Ross said.

Another debate took place at the Institute's night session, this time on farm policy.

In a resumption of their yearlong controversy, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan defended, while Albert S. Goss, master of the National Grange, attacked the Brannan agricultural price support program.

The Brannan Plan, Goss implied, envisions a superfluity of Government controls, whereas a more reasonable and efficient agricultural policy could and should be administered with much less Federal regulation.

Senate Committee Authorizes $1.497-Billion Road Outlay

By the United Press

The Senate Public Works Committee yesterday authorized a two-year $1,497,000,000 Federal-State highway program after increasing an allocation for defense roads to 50 million dollars.

The committee originally intended to provide only 20 million dollars for defense highways. It more than doubled the figure at the last moment because of the international situation.

The bill, which now goes to the full Senate, is only an authorization. The actual cash must be provided in separate legislation. It would provide for Federal highway spending of $748,500,000 in fiscal 1952 and 1953.

Chairman Dennis Chavez (D., N. Mex.) said the measure is intended to strengthen highways used in wartime and improve rural roads.

The House passed a similar bill authorizing the Federal Government to spend $1,293,000,000 on highways in the same two-year period. It included no funds for defense roads.

The Senate bill authorized $400,000,000 for secondary roads, an increase of $100,000,000 over the House-approved figure. It set aside $140,000,000 for the interstate highway system that would carry the bulk of defense traffic in a war.

Other authorizations included:

Primary roads $450,000,000, urban roads $250,000,000, forest highways $40,000,000, park roads and trails, $20,000,000, parkways, $26,000,000, emergencies, $20,000,000, Inter-American highway, $16,000,000, Rama Road in Nicaragua, $8,000,000, Tongass forest roads in Alaska, $7,000,000, and public dominion roads $10,000,000.

$89-Million 'Truth' Drive Fund Asked

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday asked Congress to appropriate 89 million dollars for a "campaign of truth" against Communist propaganda in strategic areas throughout the world.

The Chief Executive's request was made in a letter to House Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas, asking for a supplemental appropriation for the State Department, which operates the "Voice of America" information service.

About the time the request was made public, the Senate, which had not yet officially received it, voted 53 to 25 to sustain a committee cut of the "Voice of America" program in the general appropriations bill.

Increase Proposed

Senator J. William Fulbright (D., Ark.), had proposed increasing the $32,700,000 provided by the committee to $36,645,000, the amount the President asked in his January budget message.

However, Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), who supported Senator Kenneth McKeller (D., Tenn.), in the drive to maintain the committee cut, noted reports that the President would soon ask for new funds.

The Senate action appeared to be based on two factors—one, support of the Appropriations Committee, and two, knowledge that the request of the new and vastly increased appropriation would give another opportunity to review the program.

The Senate action yesterday in making the relatively small cut was, therefore, not to be taken as any test of how Mr. Truman's new request would be treated.

The White House disclosed that the General Services Administration would get seven million dollars of the new total asked to acquire a building in New York so that the State Department information program could be expanded. Another $41,288,000 would be earmarked for purchase and rental of radio facilities, it was said.

More Information Centers

President Truman's extended campaign of truth would widen distribution of films and publications, establish more information centers and enlarge the exchange of visitors with friendly nations.

"We will never attain real security until people everywhere recognize that the free nations of the world are the true seekers of permanent peace," the President said in his letter to Rayburn.

Edward W. Barrett, assistant Secretary of State in charge of the Voice program, told reporters two years will be required to get the proposed new transmitters and other such equipment in full use.

"As our power is increased," Barrett said, "it will be infinitely more difficult for the Soviet Union to jam our broadcasts."

Net Corporate Profits Rose 5% in Quarter

After-tax profits of American manufacturing firms as a whole were nearly five percent higher in the first quarter of 1950 than in the fourth quarter of 1949, two Government agencies reported yesterday.

They totaled $2,400,000,000 and $2,300,000,000 for the respective quarters, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission said in a joint quarterly report.

The gain for this year's first three months was attributed to a one percent rise in sales and a "slight" decline in costs.

These were highlights of the two-agency report:

1. After-tax profits were 100 million dollars higher in the first quarter of 1950 than the preceding quarter, but unchanged from the 1949 first quarter mark of $2,400,000,000.

2. The rate of return on stockholders' equity was 12 percent in the first quarter of 1950 against 11.6 in last year's fourth quarter and 12.8 in its first quarter.

3. Dividend payments to stockholders totaled one billion dollars against $1,700,000,000 in last year's fourth quarter and 900 million dollars in first quarter 1949.

4. Profits per dollar of sales rose to 6.2 cents from 6 in last year's fourth quarter and 6.1 in its first quarter.

5. Set-asides for Federal income taxes amounted to $1,500,000,000 in both the 1950 and 1949 first quarters against $1,300,000,000 in fourth quarter 1949.

Meat Prices Jump 6 to 35c in 6 Months

By Jean Reiff
Post Reporter

The retail price of beef, pork and lamb in Washington stores has increased from six to 35 cents a pound during the last six months.

Rising gradually during the Spring and most of June, prices have spurted upward in a more drastic fashion during the last two or three weeks, retail spokesmen agreed yesterday.

Round steak, which sold anywhere from 75 to 89 cents a pound last January, is now $1.09 and $1.10 in some stores. Similarly, center pork chops, whose price ranged from 59 to 65 cents a pound last January, can be found selling at 85 and 87 cents. Lamb loin chops, which were selling from 98 cents to $1.29 a pound, have risen to as much as $1.33 and $1.35.

Veal Prices Stable

Only veal prices seem to have remained stable or even decreased in some cuts.

How long meat prices, some of which are the highest here since World War II, will continue upward is a speculative matter, a chain store spokesman said.

Several thought prices were at their peak. Others, however, said they felt that as long as the Korean fighting continues, prices will continue upward.

Buying of housewives who do not want to get caught short is a minor part of the increase, the spokesmen agreed.

A more important factor is that the farmers are hanging on to their pigs, cattle and sheep with an eye to getting higher prices in the event of war. At this time, with plenty of grass available, the farmer can afford to wait to sell, because he does not have the expense of buying feed, it was pointed out.

A survey of stores here, showed these increases since last January for some of the more popular cuts of meat:

Sirloin steak, ranging from 89 to 95 cents a pound, now up to $1.10 and $1.11; chuck roast, which was 49 to 55 cents a pound, now up to 61 and 63 cents; standing rib roast, ranging from 55 to 69 cents a pound, up to 69 to 79 cents; ground beeff rom 49 to 55 and 57 cents a pound.

End pork chops, which were 39 to 49 cents a pound, now 59 to 65 cents; pork roast (loin and rib), averaging 33 to 55 cents a pound, now 49 to 73 cents; fresh hams, ranging from 51 to 59 cents a pound, now 63 to 65 cents; fresh pork shoulders, 33 to 39 cents a pound, now up to 49 to 69 cents.

Shoulder lamb chops, 69 to 79 cents a pound, now about 89 cents; rib lamb chops, ranging from 89 cents to $1.09 a pound, now $1.19 to $1.25; leg of lamb roast, 59 to 73 cents a pound, now about 79 cents.

Poultry Also Climbs

Poultry prices have gone up over the last six months, but not during the last few weeks. Last January fryers ranged from 29 to 45 cents a pound, now they are 59 to 63 cents. Bakers have climbed from 49 to 63 cents a pound to 53 to 69 cents.

The price of eggs has increased slightly, butter has remained about the same and most cheeses have been reduced.

Some of the stores said they had already passed on an increase of 20 cents per hundred pounds on wholesale sugar to the consumer, increasing the retail price by one cent per five pounds.

A two-cent-per pound increase in coffee prices, the fourth such in the last five weeks, went into effect in many stores here yesterday.

12 Men Killed In 2 Crashes Of AF B-50s

(From Wire Dispatches)

At least 12 men were killed and three were missing in crashes of two Air Force B-O bombers in Ohio and Arizona yesterday.

Eleven were reported dead when one of the big, four-engine planes fell and burned at Lebanon, Ohio, near Dayton, shortly before 3 p. m. (EST).

It was identified as being from the 342d Bomber Squadron, Biggs Field, Texas.

There apparently were no survivors in the Ohio crash.

Six men parachuted to safety when the other B-50 went down in the mountainous Crook National Forest, near Tucson. One body was found in the wreckage and three crewmen were missing.

A State highway patrolman said he was told by the pilot who survived the Arizona crash that his No. 3 engine exploded and blew off the right wing in flight. The patrolman said five of the survivors walked out of the rugged Galiuro mountains. The sixth suffered a leg injury.

The pilot, whom the patrolman did not identify, said the three missing men may have bailed out, too. A search for them was undertaken.

The plane exploded when it hit the mountainside, and only small pieces of wreckage remained.

2 Killed as Plane Falls on Golf Course

Pittsburgh, July 13 (AP).—Two men died in the flaming crash of a plane on the golf course of Montour Heights Country Club today and another plane was reported down in Lake Erie.

Killed in the Pittsburgh crash were Millard Ronzone, treasurer of the Copperweld Steel Co., and a friend, Richard Bailey, both of Warren, Ohio.

The pilot, John Lyden, 33, of Youngstown, is in serious condition. He suffered leg and arm injuries and a possible jaw fracture.

Coast Guardsmen recovered pieces of a wing bearing the numerals 4 and 7 from Lake Erie near the Pennsylvania-New York line after two persons reported seeing a light airplane dive into the lake during a violent electrical storm. There were no clews as to the occupants of the plane.

Breakdown in District Milk Inspection Admitted by Bureau Chief

spectors. Burdette didn't think so. Abernethy then inquired what right Burdette had to blame Congress when the blame lay in the District Building.

Burdette's testimony highlighted a day in which Maryland and Virginia lawmakers joined in efforts to keep the District milk market sewed up for their constituents.

Representatives J. Glenn Beall (R., Md.) and Howard W. Smith (D., Va.) from districts adjoining Washington, led the fight for the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association before the House District Committee.

On the other side of the Capitol Senators Harry F. Byrd and A. Willis Robertson (D., Va.) pleaded with Chairman Guy M. Gillette (D., Iowa) of a Senate Agriculture price subcommittee not to do anything to upset the local dairy cart.

Indications at the close of both hearings were that efforts to liberalize the law and let in milk from outside the present milkshed will not get far this session. The milkshed itself is being slightly enlarged, Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, District health officer, and A. R. Buddington, chief milk inspector, revealed. Farms in West Virginia, Pennsylvania and on the Maryland Eastern Shore are being inspected at present, Buddington said, and a few are being approved.

Yesterday's hearings were quiet and gentlemanly compared with those earlier in the week. The House Committee heard Representative August H. Andresen (R., Minn.) lead the attack for Midwest dairymen against the local regulations.

Andresen called the Washington situation which provides that no milk may be sold here from a farm not inspected by local milk inspectors, a localized and legalized monopoly."

An effort by Smith to interrupt Andresen at this point was ignored. A similar interruption Wednesday during testimony by Representative Reid F. Murray (R., Wis.) set off a hot argument that for a time disrupted the proceedings.

Andresen emphasized two points:

1. That he had foreseen the development of a monopoly such as exists here, when the Milk Marketing Agreement Law was passed in 1937. So he got an amendment into the act, that prohibited its use to shut the market to outside producers. But, he declared, the Secretary of Agriculture "never enforced or applied" that provision. The result, he said, is that "36 legalized monopoly markets were set up"—one in each important big city market.

He pointed out that farmers in the Washington milkshed get $5.96 per 100 pounds for their milk, compared with $2.72 his constituents in Rochester, Minn., get. Smith countered by showing that, in spite of the difference in farm prices, the retail price, "delivered at the doorstep" is below average here. When Smith declared that the delivered price in Washington was 19½ cents a quart, half a dozen committee members shouted "tell me where I can get it at that price."

The hearing took an amusing turn when Andresen accused Smith of being in favor of a closed shop in the local milk industry.

"Is it a closed shop to require purity in a product?" Smith demanded.

"A closed shop," replied Andresen, "is a monopoly created so that only certified producers can supply milk where others with the same quality of product are not permitted."

Andresen revealed that he is now drawing a bill covering the entire milk industry. "I hope to have it before the session ends," he said. It will provide, he indicated, for a single code for milk inspection, and do away with situations where a city limits the area from which milk may come.

Senators Hear Hooper

"It will correct a lot of other things in our agricultural laws that need correcting," he promised.

On the Senate side William B. Hooper, office manager for the Maryland-Virginia Milk Association, appeared before the Gillette committee, flanked by three lawyers and the two Virginia Senators.

Hooper explained how his association operates, and defended its operations. Robertson complained that the association had been "most unfortunately misrepresented" with relation to proposed changes in the District inspection laws.

Robertson declared that local milk prices are low, in spite of the prosperity of the members of the producers group. He pays 2 cents a quart more for milk in Lexington, Va., than Washingtonians pay, he asserted.

"No good purpose will be served," he said, "if we break down the regulations for the District and take a chance on health."

Farmer Treated "Unfairly"

Byrd agreed. He added that the farmer does not get his fair share of the consumer's dollar. He urged that the committee center its probe on the spread between what the farmer gets for his products and what the consumer pays.

Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, widow of the author of the pure food laws, added her testimony before the Gillette Committee in support of rigid inspection laws.

In the meantime the District Commissioners instructed Health Officer Seckinger to prepare a list of witnesses to be called next week when the Commissioners resume their study of proposed changes in inspection regulations.

The House committee will renew its hearing Tuesday. The Gillette Committee meets next Thursday and Friday.

Seckinger Planning Milk Conference

At the request of the District Commissioners, Health Officer Daniel L. Seckinger said yesterday he is preparing a list of persons to be invited to a conference that will seek to devise uniform milk practices for the Washington area. He said the list will include producer, distributor and consumer representatives from the District, Maryland and Virginia.

ICC Takes AB&W Fare Raise Request Under Advisement

By Don Olesen
Post Reporter

An A. B. & W. Transit Co. request for a 5-cent general increase in interstate bus rates was taken under advisement yesterday as witnesses warned the line, in effect: "Raise fares and you lose customers."

Interstate Commerce Commission Examiner Henry C. Lawton, who heard four days of testimony, said he will issue his report on the A. B. & W. petition "as soon as possible."

If no exceptions are filed to his decision, it becomes binding on routes between Washington and nearby Virginia.

Before hearings closed yesterday, Attorney Malcolm Miller, who headed opposition to the fare hike, said the bus line's present financial plight "is due to loss of traffic, and the remedy should be an increase in traffic."

Miller represented the Arlington County Board before the ICC hearing. He presented figures he said proved that any fare increase now would cut bus traffic and "completely nullify the fare increase."

Earlier, Harley M. Williams, chairman of the Arlington Better Government League, said the suggested fare raise would force bus riders into "car pools" instead.

Williams, who described himself as "a professional bus rider," said he had just purchased an auto and added that his fear of a fare increase "was a big factor" in the decision.

He advocated better cross-Arlington bus transportation and institution of transfers from the A. B. & W. to other lines. Company Attorney S. Harrison Kahn said the firm is considering such a transfer program.

In his concluding testimony, A. B. & W. Attorney Kahn said the line's gross profit for the first four months of this year was $160,000 less than for the same 1949 period.

29th St. NW. Improvements Will Be Made

The District Commissioners yesterday approved a $37,000 project of the highway department to improve two blocks of 29th st. nw. between Rittenhouse and Tennyson sts.

District Highway Director J. N. Robertson said the work consists of applying an asphalt surface to the existing macadam base and installing curbs and gutters. The work will probably be started in August and completed in a month, he said.

On recommendation of George E. Keneipp, director of vehicles and traffic, the Commissioners also approved seven parking changes in various parts of the city. Two of the changes opened up new on-street parking, but the other five cut down existing spaces. The changes will effect these spots:

1. S. Capitol st. from Atlantic to Brandywine sts., one hour parking permitted on the west side.

2. Upshur st. nw. from the middle of the 200 block to Rock Church rd., parking permitted on the south side.

3. S st. nw., no parking on the north side from Phelps pl. to Massachusetts ave. because of the playground on that side of the narrow street.

4. Whitehaven pkwy., no parking on the north side from 35th to 37th sts. because of the narrowness of the street.

5. F st. nw., from New Hampshire ave. to the end of the street, parking reduced from all-day to two-hour because of interference with businesses.

6. Kenilworth ave. ne., from Quarles st. to Eastern ave., no parking during evening rush hours because of interference with buses.

7. North Carolina ave., from 4th to 6th sts., no parking on the north side during morning rush hours nor on the south side during evening rush hours because of the narrowness of the street.

8 From D. C. Sip Tea With King, Queen

A lucky eight out of six thousand who sipped tea at Buckingham Palace yesterday were Washington residents abroad on summer trips.

King George and Queen Elizabeth entertained at the first of two summer garden parties, on the palace lawn. Diplomatic representatives from countries in the first half of the alphabet were included in the group yesterday. Some 1200 Americans have invitations for the second tea, next Thursday.

Clarence Hewes, former foreign service officer of the State Department, and a personal friend of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, was among the Washington contingent yesterday. Mrs. McCeney Werlich, whose late husband was in the United States Foreign Service, was also a guest. Others were Mrs. David Norton Yerkes, wife of a District architect, and her mother, Mrs. Paul Martindale Noyes, who live at 2812 P st., Miss Anne Williams, 4801 Connecticut ave.; Miss Doris Stephens, Miss Julianne Wilson, and Joseph A. Murphy, whose home is at 75 Observatory Circle.

Woman Fractures Wrist In Elevator Mishap

Mrs. Mary Ellen Mahoney, 76, of 1353 28th st. nw., was in Sibley Memorial Hospital with a fractured right wrist yesterday after she fell while climbing from a stalled elevator at the Hecht Company's Washington department store. She was one of 12 passengers in the elevator when it stalled Wednesday with its top several feet above the store's second floor.

As Mrs. Mahoney, with the other passengers, climbed from the elevator on a step ladder brought for the purpose, the car lurched slightly, throwing her to the elevator floor.

Arlington To Vote on Pool Bonds

Registered Arlington voters will decide for or against a $500,000 swimming pool bond issue on August 1, in a special referendum to be held simultaneously with the primaries.

The Arlington Democratic Club collected about 1200 signatures for the swimming pool bond petition, filed in Arlington Circuit Court July 6, according to Club President Leonard O. Hilder.

Date of the referendum was set last week by Circuit Judge Walter T. McCarthy.

Hilder said the Democratic Club hopes the proposed sum will pay for three pools, including one Negro and two white pools.

County Recreation Director W. A. Richardson said yesterday a special committee of school board and county officials has already completed a report on swimming pool needs in Arlington.

The report, indorsed in principle by the Recreation Council and the Planning Commission, calls for two outdoor pools in Arlington, plus indoor pools at all senior high schools, but does not estimate costs.

The report recommended:

One outdoor pool should be located on the Greenbriar playground, and a second might be placed in Four Mile Run Playground. Both would be for white use.

A pool in the Negro Hoffman-Boston High School should be convertible into an outdoor pool by opening of at least one side wall of the building.

Assistant School Superintendent Edward Braun haid that alternate bids are being accepted on additions currently planned to both the Washington-Lee and Hoffman-Boston High Schools.

Rockville, Md., Seeks Bids On Fire House

Bids for construction of a new $100,000 fire house to shelter seven pieces of equipment have been advertised by the Rockville Volunteer Fire Department.

The department also has named a committee headed by Chief Valentine W. Wilson to arrange immediate purchase of an ambulance. The action was taken in recognition of the international situation, Wilson said. The department now has five pieces of apparatus—four pumpers and a rescue truck.

Funds for the house and ambulance are to be raised through the annual department carnival, August 11-26, on the carnival grounds at Rockville.

Board Weighs Regulation of D. C. Locksmiths

The District License Board is thinking about licensing several trades not now regulated, C. T. Nottingham, superintendent of the license bureau, said yesterday.

One trade particularly under consideration is that of locksmith, Nottingham stated. He explained this trade was discussed by the board yesterday at a session in which a lock company official showed how easy it would be for a person owning locksmith's tools to steal a car.

"It may be," said Nottingham, "that only licensed locksmiths should be permitted to own such equipment."

The board heard the appeal of Seymour Adler, pharmacist, from an order revoking his license. Adler, part owner of the Crosstown Pharmacy, 2005 14th st. nw., was put on two years probation by District Court last January for illegal sale of narcotics. The board took the case under advisement.

Falls Church Annexation Debt Figure Disputed by Accountant

By William H. Smith
Post Reporter

Falls Church estimates of the city's indebtedness if it annexes 10.75 square miles of Fairfax County territory were sharply disputed yesterday by an accountant testifying for the county in the annexation dispute.

K. Clement Quinn of Roanoke, Va., secretary-treasurer of the Virginia Society of Public Accountants, told the three-judge Annexation Court he believes the city would be more than three million dollars above the bonded debt limit permitted by law if it won the annexation and then made improvements it previously has proposed in the annexation area.

Falls Church witnesses previously had testified the city could make improvements required by law in the annexation zone and still have a surplus of more than $1,600,000 in its debt "reservoir" if it wins the suit.

Quinn said Falls Church estimates of assets included revenues in the second year of annexation which could not be taken until the city had spent 12 percent of the assessed value of property in the area for public improvements.

He said previous Falls Church witnesses had testified that the "12 percent program" would not be completed in the first year, and therefore contended that the city could not begin collecting revenue from the new territory in the second year.

Quinn's estimate of the city's "excess" of bonded indebtedness also included two figures totaling more than two million dollars which the city disclaims as its responsibility. The county, he said, figures the city should absorb $2,051,700 as its share of a recently-approved $10,500,000 school bond issue, and $91,492 as its part of $980,000 courthouse - expansion fund.

Attorneys for the city say it cannot be held liable for any part of either fund, since both are for county projects and would not benefit the city.

Quinn's testimony brought out sharp differences between city and coupty estimates on the city's share of costs it should assume for properties to be taken over from the county in the event of annexation.

In contrast to previous Falls Church estimates that it should pay $79,000 for sewers to be taken over from the county, Quinn said the cost should be $1,200,000. He said the city should pay $1,303,551 for schools to be acquired from the county in comparison to a Falls Church cost estimate of $1,052,911.

These discrepancies, combined with "inflated" Falls Church estimates of future incomes, formed the basis for Quinn's assertion that the city would be more than $300,000 above its debt ceiling, he said.

Earlier, Fairfax School Supt. W. T. Woodson told about new school facilities planned in the annexation zone by the county. His testimony was designed to counter Falls Church claims that the county school board cannot adequately serve the area.

Woodson said that the county had planned to build new schools at Westlawn, Graham road and Willston, as well as additions to the Falls Church High School and Oak Street School. He conceded, however, that the school board probably would have to "reorganize" its plans in the event of annexation.

The suit, now in its fourth week, will resume today at 10:30 a. m.

Arlington May Require Fire Bonds

A proposed Arlington ordinace, scheduled for County Board action Saturday, would require persons who plan to clear land with brush fires to post bond first.

Written permission from the fire chief would be required before the clearing began. In the event the fire department was called to the scene, the bond would be forfeited to pay the firefighting costs to the county.

Under terms of the ordinace, bond would be $100 or less for every half acre to be cleared.

The same ordinance would make it unlawful to leave any outside fire unattended, or to burn garbage. It would also ban outside fires in commercial, industrial or manufacturing zones.

District to Appeal Anti-Negro Ruling

The District government will appeal Municipal Court Judge Frank H. Myers' decision that Washington restaurants can legally refuse to serve Negro customers.

The case will go to the Municipal Court of Appeals, probably in the fall, by agreement between Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West, Ringgold Hart, attorney for Thompson's Restaurant, and Judge Myers.

There was some doubt that the appeal could have been taken without Hart's consent, Judge Myers said yesterday.

Judge Myers decided Tuesday that the 70-year-old statutes forbidding racial discrimination in Washington restaurants had been "repealed by implication" and that Thompson's could not be prosecuted under those laws for refusing to serve three Negroes.

Judge Myers ordered the information against the restaurant dismissed.

Ordinarily the Government cannot appeal an adverse decision in a criminal case.

But Hart and West have stipulated that in his decision Judge Myers did not rule on the merits of the case, but simply on a motion to dismiss the information against the restaurant. The Government can appeal from an adverse decision on a motion, West said.

"The issue would go to the Court of Appeals anyway," Hart said yesterday. "Why not now? We could claim jeopardy in this particular case and the Government could never take an appeal. But if we did that, the Government could go back at any time and get new information against some restaurant and we would have to go through the same thing."

Judge Myers said he would not object to the stipulation between Hart and West.

West said the decision to appeal had been made yesterday after a conference between himself and Hart.

Hearing Set On Hyattsville Church Dispute

The dispute between the Hyattsville Presbyterian Church and Prince Georges County Commissioner T. Hammond Welsh over construction of the church's new annex will be aired Monday night at the Hyattsville City Council meeting.

The council will provide a common meeting ground for the disputants in an attempt to agree on a settlement, Mayor Caesar L. Aiello said. Its only role is that of a "peacemaker," he said.

The church contends it faces a loss of nearly $14,000 as a result of revocation of the building permit for the partially completed annex, William E. Roll, chairman of its building council has said.

The permit was revoked by the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission after it discovered it was issued "in error." The "error" was discovered after Welsh, who owns the adjoining property, complained that building line setbacks were being violated.

Welsh said yesterday he asked an audience with the council at its Monday session "to advise the council of the facts of the case."

"I am not asking for anything," he said. "This is not a hearing and there will be no ruling."

The council, after granting Welsh's request, invited representatives of the church to appear and state their views as well.

Although the council has no official jurisdiction over the matter, it went on record last December approving the issuance of the permit for the structure at 42d ave. and Farragut st.

Polio on Rise; National Rate Under 1949

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

A steady rise in new cases of infantile paralysis was reported yesterday by State health officers, but the total was well below last year's epidemic figure.

District and Virginia totals, however, were exceptions to the general picture, with this season's tally exceeding last year's.

Nationally, for the week ending last Saturday, 478 new cases of poliomyelitis were recorded, an increase over the 390 cases listed the preceding week. For the same week last year 683 cases were recorded.

Last Saturday's national total for the polio season year (which began in mid-March) was 2529. This compares with a total of 2954 for the same seasonal period of last year.

3663 Cases This Year

On a calendar-year basis, which, the statisticians say, does not give a true picture of polio trends, the reports showed 3663 new cases since January 1. For the same 1949 period, 3869 cases were recorded.

The District's seasonal total to last Saturday was 12, as compared with only three new cases reported for the same period last year. Virginia's new cases numbered 41, compared with only 11 last year.

The Virginia figures did not include cases recorded this week which have raised the State's total total to yesterday to 58 cases, with four deaths. The latest death the third in the current outbreak at Wytheville, 65 miles southwest of Roanoke, Va.

Of the five cases entered in the State's official records yesterday, three were from Wytheville, one from Giles County, and the fifth from Wythe County. The Wythe County case is the sole one there outside the town of Wytheville itself, where 17 cases have been recorded now, all in the past three weeks.

A Blank for Maryland

Maryland, on the national polio score card, showed no new cases recorded during the week ending Saturday. The State's cumulative total was four cases, as compared to five for the same 1949 period.

Texas recorded the largest number of new cases last week (105), but at the same time showed a decrease from the preceding week (124).

Virginia's total of 22 cases recorded last week included one from the Arlington area. This was a six-year-old Fairlington girl, admitted to Children's Hospital here on July 6.

Five new cases of polio were reported in the District last week. The number compares to none during the same week of last year, and is one more than all the cases recorded during the entire January 1 to July 8 period of 1949. The District's total for the current calendar year through Saturday was 13.

Anne Arundel Reports First 1950 Polio Case

Annapolis, Md., July 13 (AP).—Medical Officer William J. French reported the first 1950 case of infantile paralysis in Anne Arundel County today.

An 18-month-old Annapolis child has been taken to Baltimore for treatment, he said.

Girl, 5 Is District's 17th Polio Case

The District Health Department yesterday recorded Washington's seventeenth case of poliomyelitis this year—a 5-year-old girl of the 4600 block of B st. ne. She was admitted to Children's Hospital July 7, the department reported. At this time last year five polio cases had been reported from the District.

Let Death Take Hopeless Cases, Doctors Urged

Liege, Belgium, July 13 (U.P.).—A leading scientist of Belgium today said he did not mean euthanasia, long "artificial life" in persons, particularly the aged, who are incurably ill.

The scientists, Prof. Jacques Roskam, professor of internal medicine at the University of Liege, said he di dnot mean euthanasia, or so-called "mercy killing."

He told the first international conference on gerontology that the increasing life span of man is creating the problem of treating the incurably ill, many thousands of whom are hopeless cases occupying beds in hospitals while persons who could be cured cannot receive prompt attention because of lack of hospital beds and facilities.

Definitely, Dr. Roskam said, euthanisia cannot be recommended, but he described actions of society in deliberately keeping alive a patient who is hopeless as "hypocrisy."

He cited the many thousands of times that doctors "wash their hands" of a case and send the patient to an asylum, where he is left to die.

On the other hand, he said, most persons who can afford it are taken to a hospital and even if they cannot live by their own physical means, they are kept alive and forced to undergo further misery and pain.

The philosophy of permitting a dying person to die, he said, is orthothanasia, which is definitely antieuthanasia, yet not recognized by law or officially by the medical profession.

He told of one case in which an incurably ill woman of 70 years has been "kept alive" for 17 months by forced feeding and forced bowel movement. She has been unconscious those 17 months.

"The problem of whether man has a moral right deliberately to prolong artificial life is great now and will become even more important as time goes on," he said.

Miami Racketeer Setup Described

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Russell in as their representative, he said. Russell is 1 of 10 witnesses the committee has subpenaed but hasn't been able to find. Chairman Kefauver (D., Tenn.) told the hearing "these witnesses will be found and brought before the committee to testify." Russell was reported to be in Chicago.

Senator Hunt (D., Wyo.) said income tax returns examined by the committee showed the S and G boys had been contributing liberally to the Red Cross, Boy and Girl Scouts and the polio and cancer drives. He suggested these organizations should refuse to take such "blood money."

Sullivan said his committee is now checking into reports that the gamblers here are experimenting with a new type of electronic equipment which might substitute for the Nation-wide race wire. That wire was cut off at the Florida border by the State. The new contraption, known as a "piggy back," can be hitched to a power or telephone line at the two ends and an illegal conversation sent over the wires without disturbing the lines. The device apparently has a limited range, however.

Judge Stanley Milledge of Dade County Court told the Senators law enforcement officers here are "more afraid of the gang overlords than of the people who elect them." He said even the judiciary has "a little fear of the organized rackets" because they know big money will be thrown in against them at the next election if they crack down too hard.

Attorney General Heard

Florida's Attorney General Richard Erwin took the stand to say that law enforcement in this State has been pretty much a local matter. When he said the State takes action when it finds out about illegal gambling, Kefauver said tartly:

"Well, all you'd need to do is to read the newspapers to know what's going on."

And when Edwin complained that it was difficult to gather evidence, Kefauver observed that the Senate Committee has "a whole carload of records" it easily subpenaed.

One of Erwin's assistants, W. H. "Buddy" Gasque, admitted he was a personal friend of Sam Bratt, a gambler, but he said it was a strictly proper relationship. Committee Counsel Rudolph Halley did not pursue the questioning.

Erwin said there is a law on the books that makes it illegal for a race or dog track or their operators to make political contributions. He also told of the law which used to limit campaign consoon after Fuller Warren became Governor.

The Senators heard a charge and a hot denial that Tom Burke, former deputy sheriff here, had turned over "7, 8, 10 or 11 thousand dollars at a time" to the wife of the local sheriff. The sheriff, Jimmy Sullivan, who has been under fire for lax law enforcement, sat calmly by chewing on a cigar. He will testify Friday.

The charge came from R. W. Howden, former employe of the sheriff, who said Burke once told him of giving the money to Mrs. Sullivan. No reason was advanced. Burke cried "false" to the story when he took the stand. He recounted, however, his personal financial affairs. This included the keeping of $8000 cash in a tin box at home, including some $4100 of gambling winnings.

Melvin J. Richard, a Miami Beach Councilman, told a story of one man's fight against gambling. Elected on a "clean-up" pledge, he found himself with a campaign manager who, he testified, was making deals with the S and G syndicate. Under the plans, said Richard, the councilman was to take part in raids on gambling spots, arrests were to be made, he could make red-hot speeches, but gambling would continue just the same. He would be paid off by a lucrative law practice.

The councilman provided the hearing's one dramatic spot of the day when he turned on a recording of a phone conversation he had in May with a police lieutenant. The officer said he had been given orders to lay off gambling by a "Mr. Renshaw." Richard identified Renshaw as Miami Beach's city manager.

Tugs, Rising Tides Fail to Refloat S. S. Franconia

Quebec, Quebec, July 13 (AP).—Rising tides and tugs failed today to refloat the British liner Franconia, hard aground on the Island of Orleans a mile down the St. Lawrence River from Quebec.

It was reported heavier tugs may be summoned from Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Keep Food Purchases Normal, Spokesman For Grocers Asks

By the Associated Press

NEW YORK, JULY 9.—Food is plentiful in this country and war-scare buying at groceries would lead only to higher prices, a spokesman for the business said today.

"It's just plain common sense for the American people to keep their food purchases on a normal basis," said Paul S. Willis, president of Grocery Manufacturers of America. "In that way, supplies will remain in good balance with demand and prices will be stable. When people become panicky and start hoarding, they create artificial shortages and run prices up. They then have only themselves to blame."

Shelved Tax Bill

The decision to shelve the pending tax bill in view of the critical international situation is apparently due to the belated realization that revenue lost by reducing wartime excise taxes will be needed to offset prospective increases in Government military expenditures. Another equally important consideration is that lower excise taxes would encourage consumer buying of many nonessential articles whose production absorbs scarce materials and manpower needed to build up our military strength. Look at the record: the bill passed by the House reduces or eliminates retail excise taxes on luggage, handbags, jewelry, furs and cosmetics. Obviously this is not a fitting time to encourage expanded production of luxury and semiluxury articles of this sort, or to cut taxes on admission to places of amusement. Nor is it a time to reduce manufacturers' excise taxes on tires and inner tubes when a threatened rubber shortage has led the Government to take steps to boost the output of synthetic rubber. Furthermore, it would have been indefensible to eliminate taxes on electrical, gas, and oil appliances of various kinds, thereby increasing the industrial civilian demand for steel and other strategic raw materials in short supply.

If we were living in a peaceful world, and if the budget were balanced, manufacturers and sellers of these articles would be entitled to relief from burdensome wartime levies that have reduced their sales and their profits and given rise to serious localized unemployment. But we are not living in a peaceful world, and Government spending is mounting instead of declining. The country's industries are faced by the task of assisting the Government to resist Communist-instigated aggression. Even if we avoid involvement in another world war, the Korean conflict will put a severe strain on our financial and physical resources. For at the present high level of industrial activity manpower shortages are already beginning to appear in some areas as are shortages of certain basic materials. Under the circumstances a reduction in excise taxes would be utterly unjustifiable. We need those taxes not only as an offset to deficits that increase inflationary pressures but also as a means of curbing civilian demands. Tax reductions that would encourage nonessential industries to compete with Government agencies for men and materials would almost certainly lead to reimposition of the rigid economic controls that we hope it will be possible to avoid.

Surging Cotton

After years when it seemed that the country was blanketed in cotton surpluses, it is strange to hear talk of possible shortages. Yet there is no other explanation of the bull market that is now raging. Spot sales of cotton yesterday, for example, were at 36-plus cents a pound, a rise of more than 5 cents in the last few weeks. This rise is directly attributable to three factors: heavier ECA purchases than had been anticipated; the Korean crisis and the gamble that much more cotton will be needed; and the prospect of a short crop for 1950. The moot question is whether the Commodity Credit Corporation ought not to be doing more than it has done so far to stabilize the market and discourage speculation.

There is not much doubt that this year's crop will be subnormal. Last year more than 27 million acres were planted to cotton, and the yield was more than 16 million bales (a bale is 500 pounds). New acreage restrictions were imposed this year on either of two bases: 65 percent of the 1946-1948 average, or 45 percent of the highest historical figure. There was much discontent over the allotments, and this seems to be reflected in the acreage actually planted. Whereas the Department of Agriculture had expected plantings of 22 million acres, the actual figure after abandonments is around 19 million, one of the smallest on record. The yield may turn out to be less than 10 million bales.

As of now the Commodity Credit Corporation has on hand some 3,300,000 bales of 1948 cotton. Under the law it cannot sell in the domestic market for less than 105 percent of the support price plus reasonable carrying charges—a requirement intended to encourage the use of normal private channels in carrying and holding cotton. However, the support price of 27 cents a pound has long since been passed. Actually the CCC has been making cotton available at the market price for some weeks, and there has been some buying—about 350,000 bales from Government stocks.

At the same time, the fact that there have not been more takers of Government cotton indicates that there is a strong element of speculation in the price rise. At what point should the CCC step in as an antispeculation move and offer 1948 cotton at below market prices, as well as call loans on the 1949 crop so that it would be available as a backstop? It is of course necessary for the CCC to protect its investment, but that is more than recouped now. The agency is not in business to make a profit. In view of the dark international situation and the probability of limited mobilization, should not the CCC be exercising a stronger counterinflationary influence to prevent the sort of runaway in cotton that would bring a sure demand for more rigid controls?

Mr. Hoover On The U. N.

Two months ago when former President Hoover suggested that if the United Nations is to function as an instrument of lasting peace it will have to be reorganized without the Communists in it, his remarks brought a storm of protest from Lake Success and elsewhere. Friends of the United Nations feared that action on Mr. Hoover's suggestion would remove the last possible means of bridging the differences between the East and the West. In speaking at Emporia the other day Mr. Hoover stiffened his former tentative proposal. He would now have the United States inform the Kremlin its delegate would be welcomed back to the U. N. when the Soviet has abandoned its purpose of aggression and hate "but never again may you have power to thwart the march of peace." In the light of the Korean crisis this stand is said to have won considerable sympathy among the U. N. delegates.

What disturbs Mr. Hoover and many U. N. officials and free peoples all over the world is the prospect of the Soviet Union's return to the Security Council with its paralyzing veto. Since international communism has now openly embarked upon a course of military aggression, that prospect is indeed alarming. The U. N. is likely to remain a virile force only if it is free to deal with the type of cold-blooded assault that Red Korea launched against the Korean Republic. If such assaults are to be multiplied at the instigation of Moscow, it will be a piece of good fortune for the U. N. if the Russians do not return to the Council. For in that event the free world would have to have some means of putting down these aggressive thrusts, and, with the Council hamstrung, other instruments would have to be devised under Article 51 of the Charter.

But it would be a wholly different matter to try to close the Security Council door to Russia so long as she has a right to a Council seat. Mr. Hoover gives the impression that he would take the initiative in booting the Russians out or permitting their reentry only on proof of good behavior. Of course, no nation has any such authority in regard to the U. N. Any attempt on our part to exercise such authority would cost us the support of many of the countries that are now giving wholehearted support to the resistance of aggression in Korea. Our leadership in Korea has almost unanimous support from the non-Communist world, not only because it is morally right but also because it has been taken within the general framework provided by the Charter. It is of the utmost importance, we think, not to strain the widespread confidence in our integrity of purpose by flouting the Charter in any respect.

It is true, as Mr. Hoover says, that "we have a cause to win." But that cause must be won by adherence to the rules and principles to which we have pledged ourselves as a Nation. International law and lasting peace cannot be advanced by trying to force changes in the form of the United Nations in the midst of a controversy. Circumstances may effect such changes to the advantage of the free world. But the countries that are fighting lawlessness and aggression ought not to compromise their cause by any breach of faith.

Bad Appointment

If there were good reasons for Senate approval of the reappointment of Sumner Pike to the Atomic Energy Commission, there are equally good reasons for rejection of the nomination of Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming to be Undersecretary of Commerce for Transportation. In the case of Mr. Pike, the objections were flimsy and undocumented; in the case of General Fleming they are both substantial and so well documented by the evidence as to be irrefutable. Two reports of the Comptroller General and two separate reports of the House Interstate Commerce Committee show in glaring detail the grave deficiencies in General Fleming's administration of the ill-starred Maritime Commission; they disclose his almost complete lack of qualification for the kind of supervision over national transportation policy which the post of Undersecretary of Commerce would entail.

In essence these charges are that the Maritime Commission under General Fleming's leadership repeatedly misconstrued the law so as to grant excessive shipping subsidies; that General Fleming went out of his way to defend and justify those excesses after they were called to his attention; that there were gross inconsistencies in his testimony; that the commission administration was incompetent and that he "reshuffled" personnel of doubtful qualifications. Officials of two maritime organizations, testifying in opposition to his appointment, also charge that he assented to 24 of 26 transfers of American ships to foreign flags to escape regulations.

It was largely because of the dissatisfaction with the Maritime Commission that the President submitted his reorganization plan and that it was approved by the Senate. Yet the President has proposed to promote the man charged as responsible for much of this dissatisfaction to a position where he would supervise all transportation activities of the Department of Commerce and would be charged with assuring program consistency among transportation agencies and developing a unified transportation policy. Whatever the reason for his reward, surely there can be no worse inconsistency than to elevate a man discredited in one post to one of greater authority. We do not see how either the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee or the full Senate can in good conscience agree to an appointment which would be a travesty on good government.

Consumer Credit Control

The rapid postwar increase in consumer credit, nearly two thirds of which is installment credit, has been an important factor in stimulating the buying of automobiles and durable household goods. The percentage of down payments has dropped, and repayment periods have been lengthened, especially since the final expiration of Federal Reserve Board controls. So far there is no reason to fear that the rise has been excessive; for, although outstanding consumer credit has reached a record peak, the capacity of consumers to carry this credit load has also risen rapidly. The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago notes that outstanding consumer credits were, as a matter of fact, considerably higher in relation to consumer incomes in 1939-41 than at present. Moreover, owing to the rise in consumer incomes during the past decade, a larger proportion of these incomes is available for the purchase of luxuries and durable goods, after providing for basic living needs. In many cases, too, consumers have liquid assets equal to or greater than the amount of the debts incurred—savings accumulated during and since the war.

Nevertheless, the rapid postwar rise of installment credit has proceeded apace while income has been leveling off; easier credit terms have also attracted people who could not have met former stiffer requirements. As a result, the Chicago Reserve Bank concludes that the "rising level of consumer credit is gradually becoming more vulnerable from the standpoint of a downturn in income and employment."

Although there is no apprehension of an imminent downturn in business activity that would squeeze consumers who have bought goods on the installment plan, it may well be that Congress will have cause to regret its termination of consumer credit controls, despite repeated appeals of the Federal Reserve authorities and the President to extend them. For it may become necessary to curb the buying of automobiles and other durable goods in order to release men and industrial equipment for production of equipment needed by the armed services. If the Federal Reserve Board still had the authority to influence the volume of installment credit by increasing the amount of down payments and reducing the time for repayment, it would help to dampen consumer demands for durable goods, and possibly avert resort to direct Government action to curb civilian buying. In any event, permanent consumer credit regulation would have contributed to economic stability by restraining consumer buying in boom times or in times of emergency, and by stimulating buying through liberalization of credit terms in the event of a business recession.

Equal Rights Statutes

The ruling by Municipal Court Judge Frank H. Myers that the "lost" anti-discrimination statutes of 1872 and 1873 "have both been repealed by implication" is a setback to the cause of equal rights that should occasion neither surprise nor dismay. It is to be hoped that the corporation counsel's office will succeed in taking an appeal to a superior court. It is doubtful, however, that Judge Myers' decision will be reversed, since there is a good deal of law and logic to support it. Even if these antiquated statutes were held to be currently valid, moreover, it is not certain—since they contain some clauses that are obviously out of date—that they would afford the best means of assuring the equality of treatment in places of public accommodation that indubitably ought to be observed in the Capital of the United States.

There are two ways in which the pattern of racial discrimination can be altered in Washington. One way is through congressional enactment—or enactment by the municipal council when home rule is achieved—of a contemporary civil rights statute forbidding any establishment serving the general public to "refuse to sell or wait upon any respectable, well-behaved person without regard to race, color or previous condition of servitude." The other and more desirable way is to accelerate the present trend toward voluntary acceptance of this standard. When equal treatment has been practiced in Washington in Government restaurants, in public transportation, in sports arenas, in theaters, in stores, it has operated without friction, embarrassment or difficulty of any kind. The flouting of democratic principles that continues to mar the reputation of this National Capital presents a challenge to community leadership. If the civil rights statutes of 80 years ago are outmoded, so are the ugly conditions which those statutes were intended to erase.

MOMENT IN AMBER

It was a moment of sun
Sifting through quiet branches—
Sunlight on your hair
As you stood under the cedars.
Suddenly the moment was clouded and gone,
Though it is with me still—
A moment of sunlit woods, gold hair
And a girl's pale shoulders.

You said, "That tree growing
Between the rocks—
Let us climb that hill
Where the rocks are showing."
But I remember
The eloquent silence of the place,
Though you spoke mere words.
And the darker shadows
Moved across your face.

Misplaced Charity

At a time when all I want to give North Korea is the back of my hand, Poland may be giving them the shirt off my back.

Two years ago our church had a "Polish Night," replete with entertainment from the Polish embassy. All the ladies brought clothing of very good quality with years of usefulness left, to contribute to the drive.

We were beaming with a sense of doing our highest good to the poor, benighted people long oppressed by Hitler. Some of us contributed money, also.

Now Poland is sending aid to Northern Korea. Their Polish radio has announced an "Aid-for-Korea Week." They are sending all possible material aid and even street collections to North Korea.

I am hereby serving notice: Any Commie caught dead wearing clothes with my laundry mark on them may be very sure my heart ain't in it.

Troop Information

I wish to voice a strong protest against some newspapermen and radio commentators who repeatedly cite figures on the strength of our military forces and their component units, and on the movements of our troops, particularly those heading for the Korean theater.

I believe that the revelation of the size and locations of our forces materially aids our enemies and potential enemies, and that it imperils our chances of survival in war. These revelations cannot be justified in the name of the freedom of the press.

It may be argued that in a democracy the people must be well-informed. I believe that we must draw a line between information that enlightens and strengthens our people and the information which accrues to the advantage of those who would destroy us if they could.

Chinese Reaction

President Truman's decision on Korea is a new chapter of United States assistance to the troubled areas in their desperate struggle against Communist domination. The news of the President's announcement penetrates so deeply into the hearts of the people behind the bamboo curtain in Red China that customary murmurs of agony have suddenly changed with lightning speed into wide-spreading whispers which speak, in effect, louder than the Voice of America.

Whatever the outcome of the war in Korea, whatever the reaction from Moscow, the irrevocable success of the democracies has been initiated. No one who is familiar with the dark prevalent gloom of the past year in Red China can fail to observe the feeling in the air when hope returns to the despairing.

With reference to the decision regarding the United States' stand vis-a-vis Formosa (and all that the President's statement implies), the Chinese people, on the whole, are enthusiastic over the long-awaited, judicious and vigorous policy. They feel that in this policy, the United States Government has indicated that it has realized and admitted the fact that the China problem is not an issue of personal rivalry between Chiang Kai-shek and Mao Tse-tung. It is rather a problem that concerns the welfare of every one of the 450 million Chinese. Chiang's government is decadent; it has become an anachronism. To be effective in dealing with the China problem, the West simply has to "play ball" with Mao Tse-tung. Once the American mind is made up to initiate an effective deal, the spirit of democracy in China will emerge with so much intensity that the "lean-to-one-side" foreign policy of Peking will be compelled to take a different course if it is to survive.

The moral effect the world response to the U. N. decision in calling a stop to aggression in Korea created in the minds of the Chinese people is tremendous. Let no sequel of events reverse this wonderful effect!

Peace Petition

The sudden burst of propaganda from Moscow regarding the signatures collected for outlawing the atom bomb has brought a shock of realization to this reader, as well as, I suspect, to many people in the United States. This letter is intended to warn the readers not to sign the petition which purports to support the outlawing of the atom bomb, as it is a Communist-inspired and sponsored document, the purpose of which is propaganda, not sincere concern over the bomb.

Both Radio Moscow, and the Communist Party of New York are boasting of the number of signatures they have gotten from unsuspecting millions who did not know that they were unwittingly supplying grist for the propaganda mill which has struck upon a seemingly perfect soft spot in the defenses of the people; the natural fear of the bomb and what it promises for humanity.

If Russia were sincere in her desire to outlaw the atom bomb, she would concede to international control and inspection. Do not sign the petition. It is Communist gas of the familiar sort; to daze and confuse, not to promote peace.

FEPC Danger

This letter is written as the result of an article by Drew Pearson, "Capturing the South," in your issue of July 10.

If the result of the primary election in North Carolina was due to FEPC or any other special legislation attempted for the Negro, it is to be regretted. I base this conclusion on the fact that North Carolina, my home State, is one of the most liberal Southern States and gives its Negro citizens the opportunity to perform, unhampered, any of the skills they are prepared to perform. During the more than 20 years I was employed there in the Negro schools, I never heard of any mass effort to prevent the race from rising to the highest level possible for it to reach. It was encouraged in this effort by leaders who realize that the strength of the commonwealth can be increased only by building up each separate part.

I may invite the criticism of my people by saying this, but I do not feel that outside legislation can aid or improve the condition of the Negro in North Carolina. I feel that it will tend to produce friction where there is now peace and satisfaction.

Defense Economy

It appears the United States always has to be slapped down hard before it awakens to the facts of life. So it was at Pearl Harbor and so it is now in Korea. I only hope it will jar our penny pinching politicians out of their truly suicidal policy of trying to save money on our national defense. If we denude our country of its few experienced troops and of its little and inadequate equipment, what a temptation that will be to a dictator who respects only the number of divisions a country has!

Korea has already proved it's the preponderance of men on the ground that holds any country, regardless of bombs! We ought to enlist immediately a million men and provide them with adequate equipment, not tanks that are playthings!

Atlantic Union Vs. United Nations

Mr. Clarence K. Streit's communication in your issue of July 7 provides a good historical review of the postwar international crisis, but very little else. His far-fetched reasoning to the effect that a political union of the Atlantic democracies would prevent such situations as we now face in Korea is in reality meaningless and full of holes.

Mr. Streit — although a bit more tardily — takes the same line as the United World Federalists, i.e., "We told you so. If the United States had only enacted our proposal, there would have been no powder keg in Korea today."

The United World Federalists propose a world government open to all nations, preferably with Russia as a member, but without her if necessary. Messrs. Streit, Roberts and Clayton would unite only the Atlantic democracies, excluding Russia.

The former proposal is one essentially of disarmament. The latter would divide the world into two camps, both of which would be armed to the teeth in short order. Obviously one of the two has to be wrong. It seems to us that they are both wrong.

Where is the faith that we pinned in the United Nations back in 1945? Where is the praise that should be forthcoming for the swift, effective United Nations action that has condemned the invasion of Korea, and is even now mobilizing a United Nations force to drive the invading Reds back to the thirty-eighth parallel?

It is not in sight from the world government organizations. They are busy weakening the hand of Senator Warren R. Austin with their dissident cries, instead of showing the unanimity our Nation needs in this hour.

In short, the Atlantic Union desires a political, permanent wedding of the free nations. To arrive at the coalition it would lightly overlook (1) the blessings we enjoy in this country today because of past decades of independence, and (2) the fact that a military coalition, for common defense, is already in existence.

The United Nations has acted swiftly in the Korean crisis. The democracies are sending ships, planes and munitions of war. Those that do not have these are pledging critical strategic materials instead. Let us support the U. N. It is the hope of this Nation, and the world, for lasting peace. Those who would bypass it, transform it or set up organizations at cross purposes with it perform a great disservice.

Demand For Mobilization

By Marquis Childs

Danger In Panic

THE DECISIONS that must somehow be brought out of indecision are so very tough. They have not yet come forth.

Stern critics, both in and out of Government, believe they should have come forth long since. Responsible officials reply that these decisions must be made with all the available facts in hand and not in an atmosphere of haste and even panic.

The civilian secretaries for the three armed services are compiling lists of what they believe will be essential for a six-months operation. They must also schedule replacements all down the line both in men and supplies.

The Air Force has not placed an order for a single new plane since the beginning of the Korean conflict. But this does not mean merely delay. It means getting ready a detailed schedule for stepping up plane production plant by plant throughout the United States.

When these essential shopping lists are ready, then comes the question of conflicts and above all conflict with a civilian economy operating at boomtime levels. As a purely theoretical example, let's say that Secretary of the Army Frank Pace has on his list an order for 300 medium and heavy tanks.

Such an order suddenly plumped into the steel market would have an atomic effect. Steel production is already stretched to the limit. To put anything more on top of it, without a system of allocations and priorities, would create a gray market if not a black market.

BESIDES the conflict with the civilian economy, there is the probability of competition between the services for both men and materials. If reservists are called up separately by each service without regard for the vital needs of industrial production of military essentials, then the confusion may be confounded.

All this points to the responsibility that should be centralized in the National Security Resources Board and its chairman, W. Stuart Symington. The board's authority was presumably increased by a recent reorganization order. It also suggests what seem to me to be two basic questions:

1. Is there an over-all plan of operation as was contemplated by President Truman in his first speech on national defense in 1945?

2. If there is such a plan, does it call for the coordination of men and materials through the Security Resources Board supposedly created for that purpose?

This is not the time, when green, half-trained American youths are dying on a distant and desperate battlefield, for jealousies of position and priority. The time for that has long since passed.

But neither is it the time to rock the boat with shrill, hysterical cries about what was left undone. The reluctance of the Administration to take immediate steps looking to all-out effort is directly related to the hope that the Korean conflict can be localized. There is the corresponding fear that mobilization of resources would produce a like response in the Soviet Union and the end result would be total war between the two halves of the world.

THOSE who argue the other side, and they include influential members of Congress, say that if mobilization of men and resources is to bring the showdown with Russia, then we had better know it now rather than later. The time, they insist, will be desperately short in any event to prepare the country for security either in a half war such as is now going on, or in a whole war with the Soviet Union. This kind of argument is going on hour after hour in the White House and on Capitol Hill.

The struggle between frenzied haste and orderly procedure is nowhere better illustrated than in the business of civilian defense. Thus Symington is under pressure to produce immediately an ironclad plan to insure the maximum of safety for each commuunity.

Mayors and Governors telephone daily to find out why they are not being told what to do and when to do it. Symington, who has been chairman of the NSRB only three months, replies that he will have a completed plan on the date scheduled long since—September 1. To rush out something at once because of the Korean emergency would, in his opinion, be a disservice since it would be inadequate. Mayors and Governors who do not like this answer are rushing in with their own plans.

Jitters will not make up for past deficiencies. Action is supremely important. But it should not be panic action.

"White Is Black"

That wonderful July 6 cartoon by Herblock, "White is Black. Black is White. Night is Day" is an example of the kind of medium that would effectively tell our story to the peoples of the world.

Now that our Government has at last become aware that the world will be won with propaganda more effectively than with guns, let's hope that the gobbledygookers realize that most of the peoples we hope to reach probably cannot even read. Let's get Herblock to help put across the idea that Communists are liars; that Russia lines up other nations to bleed for Russia.

A Communication

From Supreme Court To S. C. Governor

By James A. Hoyt

Formerly Speaker, South Carolina House of Representatives

FOR ONE who has been Secretary of State, Justice of the Supreme Court, "Assistant President," United States Senator and Congressman, to become Governor of his State in this day and time may seem to be a retrogression, but it was not always so, for there was a time when to be Governor of South Carolina was esteemed the highest honor that could come to a citizen of that State.

Robert Y. Hayne resigned as United States Senator to accept election as Governor, and then John C. Calhoun resigned as Vice President to take the seat in the Senate vacated by Hayne.

John Rutledge resigned as Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court to become "Chief Justice of South Carolina."

John Quincy Adams, after a troublous one term as President, and after having previously served abroad for many years as Ambassador and also as Senator and Secretary of State, became a member of the House from Massachusetts, and in that capacity rendered what was by no means the least distinguished (and certainly the best remembered) service of his career.

James Monroe, after his two terms as President, became a justice of the peace in his Virginia community. This, it should be added, was after Monroe had been Ambassador to France, England and Spain, United State Senator, twice Governor of Virginia, as well as Secretary of State. Like John Quincy Adams, Mr. Monroe thought no office was too humble in which to serve his country.

AS TO Hayne, after he had won lasting fame in the historic constitutional debate with Senator Daniel Webster, he resigned his seat in the Senate to become Governor of South Carolina in 1832.

The Nullification Party in in South Carolina was preparing for the fight then already begun in the State for and against nullification. Contrary to what is generaly believed, South Carolina was by no means a unit for nullification. Some of the ablest political leaders of the State, in Congress and out, were bitterly opposed to Mr. Calhoun's doctrine and as strongly unionist in their sentiments as the native South Carolinian then in the White House—Andrew Jackson.

It was virtually necessary for the Nullificationists to control the State government in order to carry out their policies in national affairs and the campaign of 1832 was fought to control the Legislature, which then elected the Governor, and to control it by a two-thirds majority in order to ensure the calling of a State convention to pass on the nullification issue.

The Calhoun-Hayne faction won. An extra session of the Legislature was called, and the necessary action taken to call a State convention, which duly passed the "Nulification Ordinance." The Legislature, meeting in regular session immediately after the convention, proceeded to organize for the Civil War which seemed imminent. Senator Hayne was called from Washington to become Governor. Then Mr. Calhoun resigned the vice presidency to take the seat in the Senate vacated by Hayne.

IT IS also interesting to note that Hayne after serving out his term as Governor became Mayor of Charleston (1834-36) and devoted the balance of his life largely to the farsighted project of a railroad across the mountains from Charleston to Cincinnati.

John Rutledge, a member of the first Supreme Court bench selected by President Washington, resigned as Associate Justice to become Chief Justice of South Carolina." Later when Chief Justice John Jay resigned to become Governor of New York, (another precedent) John Rutledge was appointed by Washington as Chief Justice but the appointment was not confirmed by the Senate, which is another story.

President Washington then wrote to both Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and to Edward Rutledge, brother of John, offering to either of them who would accept the associate justiceship which John Rutledge had resigned, in 1791. Both declined, stating that as members of the Legislature of South Carolina they could be of more service to the general government.

Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, who had been a member of the convention which framed the Federal Constitution, not only declined the appointment as Justice of the Supreme Court but also declined the proffered appointments as Secretary of War and as Secretary of State but in 1796 he became the Ambassador to France and negotiated the famous Pinckney treaty, which is until today the subject of debate. He was the Federalist candidate for Vice President in 1800 and for President in 1804 and 1808.

TO RESIGN from the Supreme Court, relinquishing an office of the very highest honor, with life tenure, and with congenial duties and pleasant surroundings, and carrying a salary of $20,000, to undertake for half that sum a job even as "assistant President" that had nothing but hard work, disagreeable and difficult, even impossible, tasks, with the possibility of being unable to accomplish expectations—that showed that Mr. Byrnes is capable of great patriotic sacrifice.

In his present candidacy Mr. Byrnes has undoubtedly taken into account the national effect of his election as Governor of a comparatively small State.

The waning prestige and strength of State governments generally would be favorably affected. The tendency to belittle the importance and power of the individual States is one of the most dangerous and deplorable tendencies of the last decade or so, threatening the very form of our government. For Mr. Byrnes to become Governor of South Carolina, after his noted and unprecedented career in Washington, will vitalize the politics and patriotism of every other state in the Union. At least that is probably the view that "Jimmie" Byrnes takes of it.

Matter Of Fact

By Joseph And Stewart Alsop

No More Soothing Syrup

IT IS TIME to stop talking soothingly about "initial reverses" in Korea. It is time to cease the pretense that the situation there is only temporarily serious, and will be shortly got well in hand. It is time, in short, to face the fact that we have a major war on our hands, by the poor standards of existing American strength.

It would not be a major war, of course, if we were not now confronted with the bitter fruits of American disarmament. But since we do not have, and cannot rapidly produce any great weight of power to throw into Korea, we are going to find almost the least of all the Soviet satellites a tough military nut to crack.

At the moment, of course, the position in Korea is particularly critical. Of America's very limited and ill-equipped available forces, only a very small number have as yet been brought to bear. These American units are concentrated on a narrow front which at this writing, is along the Kum River and to the north of Taejon.

With the Americans thus concentrated in the center, no forces are yet available to protect the vulnerable flanks, except the sorry remnants of the South Korean army. American officers have been detailed to stiffen the South Korean troops; yet very great concern is now felt at the Pentagon, particularly about the eastern flank. An encircling movement, driving through these South Korean troops, would cut off the American force in its Kum River and Taejon positions. It may well have been attempted, it may even have been carried out, in the short interval before these words reach print.

THIS SORT of thing, which we have already experienced once at Chonan, is the acute, immediate danger. A solid, stable front has not yet been formed in Korea. It cannot be formed until much larger American forces have been landed there and made ready for battle. Until that time, no amount of individual bravery will eliminate the possibility of our being driven into a narrow beachhead, or even being forced to evacuate.

The period of immediate, acute danger is likely, moreover, to be rather prolonged. The only useful Korean port now available to General MacArthur is Pusan, with a single dock. Redeploying the wartime special landing equipment to the Far East will be extremely time-consuming. As for the possibility of an airlift of troops and supplies from the Japanese islands, airfields are almost non-existent in Korea; the first priority is to build strips for fighters to give our troops close support; and the construction of large airfields suitable for big transports will have to come after that.

All these difficulties and perils are, obviously, the price of having been caught by surprise. Unfortunately, even if our luck holds, and the supply problem begins to be solved, and a stable front is established, we are bound to encounter equally great, although different difficulties in the second phase.

THESE will result from our shocking deficiencies in almost every kind of weapon needed for land warfare, and from our shortage of troops ready for combat. Presentation of the details of our own shortages must be deferred to later reports. It is enough to say here that even the Pentagon optimists now admit we shall find it hard to go over from the defensive to the offensive. And this will still be true even when all the Army and Marine divisions that can be scraped up, and all the tank forces and tactical air units that can be found, are at last in Korea and in battle.

The truth is, the North Korean army is a sizable force, and in many respects better armed than the Americans. The original invaders, numbering between 75,000 and 85,000 men, are backed up by a heavy reserve of Koreans who were either captives trained by the Russians in Siberia, or former fighting volunteers with the Chinese Communists. This reserve, now coming into combat, is estimated at not less than 125,000 men, and by some authorities as high as 250,000.

As to weapons, the vast arsenals of the Soviet Union are open to the North Koreans, and they have some equipment which, as yet, we have found no way to beat. For example, as the intelligence has repeatedly warned, the Soviet heavy tanks have proved invulnerable to all our antitank weapons, except at almost impossibly close range with very lucky hits.

For all these reasons, certain of the wisest planners are now talking of the reconquest of Korea being "something like the Italian campaign," which it took us two years of all-out war effort to prepare for. And even if you discount this estimate, the whole picture makes our present business-as-usual, politics-as-usual approach to the Korean war look as insane as it is suicidal.

French Assembly Approves Cabinet of Pleven 329 to 224

Paris, July 13 (AP).—The French National Assembly approved Premier Rene Pleven's new Centrist Cabinet 329 to 224 today, ending a political crisis that began June 24.

Communists and De Gaullists formed the core of the opposition to Pleven's choices, which restored the Socialist Party to the government coalition it left last February.

The crisis began when Premier George Bidault's cabinet was forced out June 24. Henri Queuille took over the premiership, but resigned when he lost his first test July 4 in the assembly, 336 to 221.

Pleven defended Jules Moch, his new Socialist Defense Minister, from attacks by both Communists and Rightists.

Moch drew Communist hatred by his strong police action during strikes when he was Minister of the Interior. The Rightists were concerned lest Moch, as a Socialist, take a soft line towards the Communist-led troops fighting the French in Indo-China.

Said Pleven:

"I want to remind you that M. Moch has four citations from the war of 1914. And in 1939, he never wanted to quit his uniform."

There were howls of protest from the Communists, who took this as a reference to the fact their chief, Maurice Thorez, abandoned the French army for a trip to Moscow early in the war.

One Red deputy shouted:

"He ordered the workers killed!"

group from some base in Japan.

"This combat group would arrive within two hours of call and would immediately secure the airport. Our work from that time on would consist of regular operations."

Throughout the report to the home office, Traylor and other members of the Kimpo staff repeatedly indicated they expected immediate aid in the event of attack.

Expected Armed Help

"We believed that as soon as any trouble started armed forces would be covering the field. In the formal agreement between our two governments, it was clearly stated that the Koreans would secure the field. I called the Korean Chief of Staff and was assured that armed forces were on their way to Kimpo to protect it.

"None ever came. A Colonel Lee from the Military Police group called us and said he could furnish us 10 men if we could supply them with arms. This we could not do."

First news of the attack, Traylor wrote, came Sunday morning at 9:30:

"Mrs. Traylor and I were leaving our suite in the Embassy building, when a messenger came running and informed us that I was wanted in the Ambassador's office immediately . . . I was informed that the soldiers of North Korea had crossed the thirty-eighth parallel line at 4 a. m. that morning and that the situation was very serious."

Eat Picnic Fare

It was a foggy morning, with a zero ceiling, as Traylor drove the 18 miles west from Seoul to the Kimpo air base. "Army trucks were driving through the streets picking up Korean soldiers. Evidently, no announcement had been made regarding the emergency by the Korean government."

Americans were put on guard at the base at strategic points, supplemented by about 50 Korean employes there. All hands were fed a "good meal of roast chicken, Boston beans and potato salad that had been prepared for a picnic that afternoon."

Shortly before noon, two unidentified aircraft appeared over the field. "Evidently they were only on an observation flight as they suddenly turned and flew back to the North."

"We got all of our heavy motor vehicle equipment and staggered these vehicles to block the runways. We also disbursed our gasoline storage dump, using drums to help block the runway.

Two-Gun Arsenal

"We were in frequent contact with the Ambassador's office and with several points in Japan. Our communications were checked frequently and we prepared to use emergency setups in case our telephone lines should be cut."

The field was armed with two small 30-caliber machine guns, mounted on the roof, manned by two Korean Air Force soldiers and Kimpo personnel.

At 5:30 p.m., Sunday: "Suddenly, without any warning, two Yak fighters appeared from a cloud bank and strafed our Administration building. This first attack consisted of about three passes. No bombs were dropped. This helped to confirm our opinion that the North Koreans wanted the airport for their own use and would not destroy it. During the second attack our large gasoline refueling truck and trailer had been set on fire. These were destroyed."

Enemy Moving In

"We had four separate attacks Sunday afternoon. Because of these concentrated attacks, we decided to send the nine women and four children into Seoul in our Red Cross ambulance. Up to this time Kimpo was the main object of attack. We had been informed that a large coastal landing force was approaching Kimpo from the west and was approximately ten miles from the airport.

"We could plainly hear the firing and see the smoke from the firing. Unless this group was held, we expected to be invaded some time during the night."

An American plane, into Kimpo for repairs, was awaiting orders to move when an attack came in. The crew "did not believe an American plane would be attacked. However, on the first attack this plane was strafed and two engines and one wing were badly damaged."

As the evening wore on, the Kimpo men set about an all-night watch, "Not a single American soldier or officer had arrived to help us. The only Korean soldiers we had were the two Koreans on the roof manning one of our machine guns . . .

Ordered to Stay

"We asked the Ambassador for instructions in case we were attacked by ground forces which we could see were progressing toward us from the hills. He told us to remain there by all means . . .

"Our own plan, if we were attacked, was to retire to the roof which had only two entrances. We believed we could hold these entrances for some time with the two machine guns."

Evacuation of American dependents in the area was begun at 3 a. m. Monday morning. Kimpo base was told to expect an all-out attack at daybreak.

Attack followed attack on Monday. Then Traylor wrote that evacuation of all remaining American women and some men would begin just before daybreak Tuesday. Six planes flew in, were loaded and dispatched in one hour and 21 minutes.

"As the last plane was in the air, I called the Ambassador's office to give him the report. He informed me to stand by for further instruction" and plans for further exacuations.

Another Kimpo man, unidentified in the report, wrote of the attacks: "Our American gun crew and the Korean gun crew started firing on the planes after the first attack, and it is much more than likely that we were the first Americans to fire on the invader. We realized that our 30 calibers didn't have a chance in hell of doing any damage to the planes, but it helped the morale of the Korean people with us, and ours too; at least we weren't taking it lying down."

Throughout the siege, the men at the Kimpo base heard conflicting reports of North Korean strength. The number of planes estimated at from 20 to 40 and up to 300. A troop situation report placed 800 invaders 12 miles away, against a numerically larger South Korean force.

F-80's and F-82's flew over Kimpo to cover the evacuation of American Mission personnel.

"A few moments after the last plane had taken off, Yak fighters appeared low over the field and opened fire on the F-82's. What happened thereafter was partly obscured from our vision by low-hanging clouds, but what we did see was a lovely sight.

Enemy Pilot Killed

"Just northeast of the field, directly over our transmitter site, an F-82 roared up from behind and blew a Yak all to hell. The action took place at about 400 feet. The Yak pilot managed to bail out and we watched him come down in the middle of the South Korean air force bivouac. We later learned that he drew his pistol after landing and was killed by a South Korean soldier. Two other Yaks were reported shot down, but we did not witness the action.

"From this time on, American fighters were continually overhead."

The Ambassador then ordered complete evacuation, with "Bourne personnel to take the last plane."

"With the arrival of evacuee personnel, final evacuation took place, and all personnel were evacuated. McReynolds (Marshal McReynolds, Berryville, Va.) took the last plane, intending to destroy the C-54 (repaired, then strafed) on the ramp. He was ordered not to do this.

"We had a hard time saying good-by to our Korean help on the field. They stood by through the whole thing, and walking out on them was the most distasteful action of our lives. To a man, we hope to some day make it up to them."

Bourne Associates here said that all their personnel was safely evacuated to points in Japan.

One of the men had an especial word to say for the Korean personnel at the base:

"The telephone exchange and the radio room were operated continuously during attacks without the slightest pause from Sunday morning until Tuesday night when the last plane left, many of them working without relief.

"The last thing I noted before leaving on the last plane was our guard section cleaning up the debris left on the ramp by the evacuees. I took a trip through the building a few minutes before I left, and clean-up was being carried on in a very calm manner, as well as all communication lines being manned and in operation."

The Bourne personnel had packed all their records and had planned to take them out of Korea, but were told by the American Consul that no baggage or brief cases would be permitted. As a result, the employes "lost all their personal effects except the clothing they had on."

Traylor wrote that because of the short notice before evacuation of Kimpo, "we were unable to make satisfactory arrangements for the payroll of our 410 Korean employes." He drew a power of attorney to an official in the Korean government, which had to be countersigned by the Korean disbursing officer.

In addition to the Washington area residents at the Kimpo base, the Bourne Associates also reported that Charles B. Stewart and his wife, Lottie Mae Stewart, of Martinsburg, W. Va., were there.

Pope Raises Bishop O'Hara To Archbishop

Vatican City, July 13 (AP).—Pope Pius put his personal stamp of approval today on the Most Rev. Gerald P. O'Hara's diplomatic work behind the Iron Curtain by naming him an archbishop.

The new archbishop, head of the Roman Catholic diocese of Savannah-Atlanta, Ga., administered the Bucharest nunciature from 1947 until his expulsion by Communist-Romania last week. He was the last Vatican envoy to an Iron Curtain country.

The Pope conferred the title "ad personam" (to the person).

Vatican sources explained that the Pope, by conferring the title upon the person rather than his diocese wished to incidate directly his approval of the American prelate's stand in the face of Communist pressure.

Romania leveled spy charges against Archbishop O'Hara's mission July 4. He and his assistants were given three days to leave the country.

Blue Plate Special:

FOOTBALL—The decision of National Football League Commissioner Bert Bell to lift the three-year suspension of Frankie Filchock merits some applause but somehow it falls short of qualifying as a truly generous act. No more than you can poison a man and then pump his stomach out and claim you've done the generous thing.

There was a lot of doubt that Filchock had deserved the suspension in the first place; at least that harsh a crack-down. He didn't accept the bribe that was offered him to "throw" the Giants' game against the Bears in 1946, he merely failed to report the offer to league officials. That last was apparently his only guilt.

POVICH

Even after the bribe offer was learned, league officials still permitted Filchock to play in the game thus conceding that his had been no major sin. Yet they cracked down on him later with a three-year suspension.

His reinstatement was another admission that the Giants' quarterback had committed no horrendous violation. You could boil it down to say that his was a three-year enforced penance for not accepting a bribe. Any refusal to lift h's suspension would have been no less than cruel.

BASEBALL—The present sad circumstances of Ted Williams, out of the Red Sox lineup with the broken elbow he suffered in the All-Star game, may serve at least one good purpose. It ought to still the beefs that the guy isn't a hustling ball player. He broke his arm hustling.

Williams' defenders against the charges that he is prone to loaf, have long maintained that his actions are deceptive. "What you think is a lack of hustle is deceptive," they have always claimed. "The only way he knows how to run is with a lope, and it may look as if he isn't digging, but the guy is covering ground."

In Williams' case it could almost be carried further and be said the acme of hustle, little Dom DiMaggio, whose short and furious strides always made Williams' look lazy by contrast.

Big Ted didn't have to crash into that wall in Chicago for Ralph Kiner's long drive. He could have given it the how-do-you-do and let it go, and nobody would have blamed him. But he didn't choose to play it that way.

BOXING—Up in New York, the International Boxing Club bosses are revising their estimates of the value of television and radio receipts since Wednesday night's Jake LaMotta-Tiberio Mitri middleweight title fight, which was neither televised nor broadcast.

The stay-at-homes, deprived of their living-room box seats, turned out in such numbers for that one that the fight drew the Garden's biggest boxing gate in two years, $99,000. And despite the fact, also, that the fight had gotten a poor press and neither LaMotta nor Mitri was famed as a drawing card.

The IBC people had been getting $16,000 a show for the video and radio rights and were at the point of believing that no show could successfully be staged without that added revenue. Yet the LaMotta-Mitri fight returned bigger profits merely from gate receipts than any of their other shows for a couple of years.

It leaves the Fight Managers' Guild, striking now for a bigger cut of the video-radio revenue, in sorry shape. They will have no case, if the promoters decide to turn back the clock and cut out the broadcasts and telecasts, as they threaten to do.

ALL-STAR GAME—That last one was the finest, and in the nick of time, too, because there is no sense denying that the All-Star games were becoming sour and nothing but drudgery to the players, with a corresponding lack of fan-interest. The American League was winning too many of them, too.

But the pyrotechnics at Chicago, with the National League finally winning in 14 innings, is a tremendous shot in the arm to the contest. It was all that an All-Star game is supposed to be, averaging almost one super-play an inning, and its effect will be noted next summer when the All-Star game again is a topic.

Fans who were becoming jaded with one-sided A. L. triumphs now have a new respect for the National League. For the players who didn't care whether or not they were on the squads, it becomes an honor anew. And for the clubowners who use the gate receipts to help pay the players' pensions, it looks like a nice take again.

Bell Lifts Ban On Filchock

Philadelphia, July 13 (AP).—Bert Bell, National Football League commissioner, today ended the indefinite suspension of Frank Filchock, New York Giants star, barred from the league three years ago after he was offered a bribe.

Filchock, one-time Redskin, and a teammate, Merle Hapes, were suspended after a hearing before Bell in 1947. They admitted that they received and rejected a bribe offer and did not report it to their club or the league.

Three men were convicted and sentenced to jail for offering money to Filchok and Hapes to "fix" the NFL championship game between the Giants and the Chicago Bears.

Neither Filchock nor Hapes was accused of accepting any money.

Bell said he lifted the suspension on Filchock after a thorough investigation showed the 33-year-old backfield star "has at all times conducted himself in a manner reflecting the highest standards of sportsmanship."

D. C. Team Tied In Golf Tourney; Ferris Best Scorer

Dayton, O., July 13 (AP).—Golfers from Wright-Patterson Air Force Base pulled even with the Headquarters team from Washington today in second round play of the Air Materiel Command's tournament here.

Both teams posted 452s for 36 holes of their 72-hole match play over the Wright-Patterson course. McClellan Air Force Base of Sacramento, Calif., was sceond with 470.

Capt. Don Ferris of Headquarters AMC paced individual scorers with 69-76—145 over the par-72 layout.

Phils' Three Homers Beat Cardinals for Simmons, 3-2

St. Louis, July 13 (AP).—Young Curt Simmons stung the St. Louis Cardinals with a four-hit performance that gave Philadelphia a 3-2 victory tonight and sent the Phillies two games ahead in the National League race

Home runs by Granny Hamner, Dick Sisler and Andy Seminick accounted for the Phillies' scores.

In gaining his eleventh triumph of the year, Simmons struck out six men and walked but two.

Roe Injured, Bums Lose to Cubs, 6-4

Chicago, July 13 (AP).—The skidding Brooklyn Dodgers suffered a double setback today. Not only did the Chicago Cubs whip them, 6-4, but the defending champions lost the services of their pitching ace, Preacher Roe, for an indefinite time.

Roe hurt his pitching shoulder throwing a fast ball to Hank Sauer in the third inning and retired when his forearm became numb pitching to Bill Serena. In between he hit Andy Pafko with a three-and-two pitch.

Porky Oliver, Harrison Top Inverness Golf

Toledo, Ohio, July 13 (AP).—Drawling "Dutch" Harrison of Little Rock, Ark., and pudgy "Porky" Oliver of Seattle hopped off in front today in the $15,000 Inverness four-ball matches.

The colorful twosome, ripping eight strokes off par with a best-ball 63 over the 6558-yard Inverness layout, finished four up over favored Lloyd Mangrum of Niles, Ill., and Cary Middlecoff of Ormond Beach, Fla.

That edge led seven other twosomes at the end of the first round of the 126-hole match play marathon with the peculiar scoring system by three points, no other pair being able to win more than a single point over its opening foe.

Harrison and Oliver constructed their lead on the front nine with a 30, five under the card, and then held on down the stretch.

Deadlocked for second place were the Clayton Heafner-Johnny Palmer and Chick Harbert-Bob Hamilton duos. Heafner and Palmer finished one up over Henry Ransom and Skip Alexander. Harbert and Hamilton fashioned a 65 for a one-hole edge over Jimmy Demaret and Jack Burke, jr.

In the other match Sam Snead and Jim Ferrier, finished even with Freddie Haas, jr., and Fred Hawkins, each twosome carding 65's.

Double rounds are scheduled Friday, Saturday and Sunday, each pair meeting each other twosome over the 18-hole route in the round-robin. In each match a team gets a plus equal to the number of holes it finishes ahead of its opponent.

7 Bone Chips Removed

Ted Williams May Be Able To Rejoin Bosox This Season

Boston, July 13 (AP).—Ted Williams, the Boston Red Sox's fractured elbowed $125,000 slugger, tonight was given some chance of playing again this season by the surgeons who removed seven bone fragments earlier in the day.

Williams was reported "resting comforably" in a nearby Cambridge hospital after a 75-minute operation that Drs. Joseph Shortell and Ralph McCarthy described as "very successful."

Dr. Shortell, an outstanding orthopetic specialist, expressed confidence that Williams, baseball's highest-salaried performer, not only would recover full use of his left arm but also would be able to play again. But he declined to estimate the time one of baseball's all-time outfield stars would be sidelined.

Dr. McCarthy, the club's regular physician, gave a more encouraging report.

"We do not anticipate a second operation," he said. "It will be several weeks before Ted regains normal motion of his arm. We hope he will be ready to play again before the end of this season."

Dr. Shortell predicted Williams' arm would be useless for the next few days, which he will spend in the hospital. But within a week he will be ready to begin post-operative exercises.

Dr. McCarthy displayed the bone fragments, the largest of which was the size and shape of a dime coin, as he marveled over Williams' ability to withstand severe pain. From the time Williams suffered the injury until it was X-rayed yesterday, the arm had swollen to twice its normal size.

In Trip Dispute

17 Players Fined, Banned

Waterbury, Conn., July 13 (AP). Stuart Wider, business manager of the Waterbury team of the Colonial Baseball League, said tonight all 17 players on the squad had been fined $100 and suspended for refusing to board a bus for Kingston, N. Y.

A game scheduled there tonight was forfeited to Kingston.

A source close to the players said they met last night and voted unanimously against making the 95 miles trip unless they could remain overnight in Kingston where a night game is scheduled again tomorrow.

Players declared the club wanted to bring the team back to Waterbury by bus after tonight's game, and return tomorrow afternoon to Kingston.

The Colonial League has suffered from declining attendance due in part to bad weather. The decision to bring the team home tonight was believed to be in the interests of club economy.

Joe Louis May Fight Charles

New York, July 13 (AP).—The possibility of September championship fights between Joe Louis and Ezzard Charles and Jake La Motta and Ray Robinson plus an expected break on the television dispute had the boys smiling along Cauliflower Row today.

Jim Norris, president of the International Boxing Club, said that Louis would come out of retirement to oppose Charles in September if he could straighten out his tax problems with Washington.

The husky boxing promoter said if everything worked out right, La Motta might defend his middleweight title against Sugar Ray in the first week of September. Louis and Charles would be ticketed for the last week in September.

The television dispute between the IBC and the New York boxing managers may be settled by tomorrow. The IBC raised its offer to $2250 for each main event fighter and there was good reason to believe that the managers would accept the offer at a general meeting tomorrow.

Redskins Shift To Plane for 3 Games This Year

The Redskins will travel by air next fall for three of their 12 National Football League games.

Heretofore strictly a railroad team, the pros will fly to Milwaukee, Pittsburgh and Cleveland for Sunday games. They'll continue to use the train for games in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

Except for the season's finale against the Rams in Los Angeles last year, the Redskins have never flown. They launch their plane travel Sunday morning, going to Los Angeles to open football practice.

Vollmer Hits Homer; Bosox Top Chisox, 8-7

Boston, July 13 (AP).—Clyde Vollmer, left field replacement for injured Ted Williams, slammed a homer and doubled twice as the Boston Red Sox topped the Chicago White Sox, 8-7, in a game cut by rain to 7½ innings tonight before a 23,751 crowd.

Junior Stephens clouted his nineteenth homer as Righthander Willard Nixon, making his first major league start, was credited with the victory.

Newhouser Halts Rally With 3 On, None Out

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

The Detroit Tigers resumed their 1950 hobby of beating the Nats in Griffith Stadium last night with Pitcher Hal Newhouser perspiring his way to a squeaky sort of 5-2 victory.

It was all very uncertain until the last out, despite the 4-0 lead that Newhouser carried into the eighth inning. Cass Michaels pruned his advantage to 4-2, with an eighth inning homer, and then in the ninth the Nats suddenly threatened to tie the score.

They had the tying run on base with none out, in fact, with the 11,783 customers screaming for some kind of a hit, at which point Newhouser pitched himself completely out of trouble.

Evans' Double Play Ends It

Mickey Vernon and Sam Mele started that Nats' ninth with singles to left and when Newhouser walked Ostrowski to fill the bases, the tempo was quickened in the Detroit bullpen where a brace of reliefers were warming up.

Newhouser eased the pressure for himself immediately though, by getting rid of Sam Dente on a pop foul, and then sweated out a 3-0 count on Al Evans by getting his next two pitches over and watching Evans finally ground to Kell for a game-ending double play.

It was the sixth victory for the Tigers in seven jousts in Griffith Stadium this season and a six-hitter for Newhouser. If you're asking for more statistics, it was the first time in his last six games that the Detroit lefthander has gone the route.

Consuegra Loses Tough One

The losing pitcher was Sandalio Consuegra, but he was quite undisgraced. He left the scene beaten, 4-0, at the end of eight innings, but two of the Tiger runs to that point stemmed from errors by Johnny Ostrowski and Michaels.

Joe Haynes gave up the Tigers' last run, in the ninth, before he was replaced by Rookie Roger Martinez, who broke into the big leagues by getting out the only two batters he faced.

They clipped Consuegra for a 1-0 lead after two were out in the first inning, when Kell singled to

Virginia-Bred Bachelor Belle Takes Charles Town Feature

Bill Bennings . . .

AT CHARLES TOWN

DEAR FOLKS:

Joe (Buddy) Brocator, popular West Virginia official, leaves for Wheeling at the conclusion of this meeting to work as assistant to Racing Secretary Fred Burton. Although there have been 48 days of racing this year, horsemen have only claimed seven horses, a new low for the halter brigade. Gordon P. Fought, of Wheeling, has been appointed to fill out the unexpired term of C. H. McKown, who recently resigned as chairman of the West Virginia Racing Commission. John P. Turner, sr., one of the most capable officials in racing, is to be State steward at Wheeling when the Ohio River oval swings into action on July 22. Ralph Thomas, an exercise boy here, was suspended for the remainder of the meeting for striking Jockey Eugene Dosher during training hours yesterday. See you on the rail.

Palumbo Gives Mare Fine Ride

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, W. Va., July 13—Bridgeforth and Wright's Virginia-bred mare Bachelor Belle gave an excellent exhibition of speed and stamina when she staved off challenge after challenge in winning the Falls Church purse, the main attraction here this evening.

Handled with rare judgment by the veteran Sammy Palumbo the six-year old defeated her five rivals by a full length after whirling the short seven furlongs in 1:29, over a racing strip in perfect condition.

It was the mare's second triumph during the session, and the gathering of 4000 sent her postward the favorite. She returned only $3.80 for $2.

Mrs. E. G. Boyce's Lock Control, who was an early trailer, charged strongly in the final drive to gain a head decision over the fading Gain a'Foot for second honors.

In the daily double, John Foster's Blarney, paying $21.20, and C. C. Parsons' Valdina Goblin, who returned $22.40 combined to reward $243 t oholders of 7 and 9 daily double tickets.

Jockey J. Cruz rode Blarney, while F. D. Rivera was astride Valdina Goblin in the second race.

Laurel Under 1949 Wagering

Laurel Raceway's third harness meet ended last night with the feature seventh race, a mile pacending in an upset as Mighty Boy, longest shot in a four-horse field won in a thriller from Hollis before a crowd of 4,500 fans.

A down pour turned the track into a quagmire. It also kept the crowd down, and Laurel Raceway failed to equal last year's record-breaking $5,274,089 as only $166,440 was waged by the fans for the night. As a result, Laurel wounded up with a total of $5,241,092—$32,987 short of last year's figure.

Solomons Power Boat Regatta Tops Busy Boating Weekend

This Weekend

Casting Club Host to Tops In East Here

By Ralph Murdock

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL CASTING CLUB, which sponsors the second annual casting tournament of the Eastern Association of Amateur casting clubs through its president, Clifford L. Netherton, states that all preparations have been made for the big event on Saturday and Sunday.

Murdock

Beginning at 2 p. m. on Saturday, the Salmon Fly distance event will take place nad will be immediately followed by the Fishermen's Distance Bait contest. These two events will be cast at the Lincoln Memorial reflecting pool. Two other events, however, will be staged on the White House Ellipse on Saturday morning.

Tournament headquarters have been established at the Willard Hotel where a dinner will be served at 7 p. m. on Saturday evening. The officers of the Eastern Association are President John L. Guinan of Hartford, Conn.; Herman S. Deiser, of Paterson, N. J.; Clifton L. Gilson of Morningdale, Mass.; Jay Cee Reed of Washington, D. C.; and Samuel C. Weitz of Hartford, Conn.

SECRETARY of Interior Chapman has just announced proposed hunting regulations for next fall for migratory game birds other than waterfowl. Chapman said the waterfowl regulations will not be issued until August 26, about a month later than usual. He said this will give the Fish and Wildlife Service more time to analyze the latest information from its biologists on the northern breeding grounds.

Weekend Suggestions:

HARDHEADS—Sand Gates to Point Patience. Good catches mostly big ones. Frozen shrimp is the best bait

ROCKFISH—Point Patience is the hot spot. Chumming with grass shrimp is the procedure—catches up to 283.

PORGIES — Lewes, Delaware—plenty of 'em.

Cambridge, Gibson Hold Sail Events

By Happy Walker

Three major regatta events will attract Washington's boating clan to the Chesapeake Bay area over the weekend as the season hits its mid-summer peak.

Walker

The quaint southern Maryland town of Solomons will be headquarters for the colorful 10th annual powerboat regatta tomorrow and Sunday with a thrill-packed schedule of power races, ranging from the tiny Class A hydroplane to the record-holding 225 cu. in hydros.

Sponsored by the Solomons Island Yacht Club, the "speedboatcade" kicks off tomorrow at noon with a full slate of outboard hydro races and several added specialty classes. Regatta Chairman G. I. Ruppert Lore declares pre-race interest far ahead of previous years with entries already on hand from a number of top East Coast drivers.

With little time out for breakfast, Sunday's day-long program gets under way at 10 a. m. with a well-rounded slate of stock utility classes followed by the speedier hydros and inboards and climaxed with the featured Governor's Trophy race at 5:20 p. m.

The yacht club will be the setting for the regatta dance Saturday evening and on Sunday, Governor Preston Lane will preside at trophy presentations after the races. William A. Rogers, Hudson Moses, Helen Walker, Earl Hilderbrand and this writer will be on hand to assist in officiating at the A.P.B.A. sanctioned spectacle.

THE CAMBRIDGE Yacht Club, on the Choptank River, will be the scene of the fifth annual Byrd series sail races Saturday and Sunday with the Eastern Seaboard Hampton-One-Design championship at stake. Large fleets of Hamptions are expected to be on hand from Hampton, Va., home of the National-One-Design craft, and the Annapolis Yacht Club.

This weekend affair will also be a forerunner to the Cambridge Yacht Club annual sail regatta next week, July 22-23, which will include all small classes as well as Thistles, Stars, Indian Landings and Hamptons in a three-race double header. The usual after race frolics will prevail on both weekends.

STILL ANOTHER weekend sailing attraction will be the Miller Memorial series and the Gibson Island challenge cup regatta, slated for the blue ribbon Gibson Island Yacht Squadron, near Annapolis. The two major club events are limited to Stars and Comets, the latter of which will draw heavily from Washington's extensive Comet fleet.

MEANWHILE, here at home on the upper Potomac, local canoe enthusiasts, in the major league class, are puting in some strenuous training hours in preparation for the national canoe championship to be held at Lake Sebago, Bear Mountain, New York.

Paddlers from Washington Canoe Club, Dempsey's Boat Club and Potomac Boat Club will make up the contingent expected to be on hand at the Lake Sebago affair, national highlight of canoeing events.

THE PRESIDENT'S CUP Regatta held its second luncheon of the season at the Willard Hotel Wednesday with John Remon presiding in the absence of President Edward C. Baltz.

Committee reports included the illuminated night cruiser parade slated as the opening event of the mid-September President's Cup races. Jack Miller,

Two Other Favorites Upset

Schwartz Sidelines Top-Seeded Cochell

By Gordon Beard

First-seeded Earl Cochell and two other top-seeded players were eliminated in the quarterfinals of the Middle Atlantic tennis championships at the Kenwood Golf and Country Club yesterday.

Seventh-seeded Sidney Schwartz of New York whipped Cochell, the Nation's fifth-ranking player, 6—3, 6—4; Gil Shea, seeded eighth, eliminated third-seeded Hugh Stewart, 6—3, 11—9; and fourth-seeded Ricardo Balbiers bowed to sixth-ranking Straight Clark, 9—7, 6—4.

Schwartz controlled his sometimes erratic strokes and commited few errors as he downed Cochell. The New Yorker had his drop shot working to perfection, constantly keeping Cochell off balance.

On occasions when Cochell rushed the net to attempt smashes, Schwartz passed him with well-placed cross court and sideline volleys.

The winner took 12 of the last 13 points to break a 3-3 tie and take the first set and then overcame a 2-3 deficit in the final set to win.

The usually cocky Cochell found no time for clowning against Schwartz and he twice stopped the game to demand more line judges. He made so much noise that Shea, playing on the adjacent court and himself involved in several rhubarbs Wednesday, asked for a little more silence.

The final quarterfinal match between fifth-seeded Arnold Saul and Gil Brink, No. 2, was halted by rain after Brink won the first set, 6—4. The match will be completed today, the only singles event on the card.

Newhouser Stops Griffs With 6 Hits

left and Wertz got him home with a lengthy double to right-center. They came back for more in the second after the Cuban walked Groth and Robinson with none out, and got two more.

The senor fanned Kolloway, but Michaels' throw to second for a force play on Newhouser's grounder hit Robinson on the back and left the bases full. Lipon moved the runs home with a double over third base.

Consuegra checked the damage at that point by slipping a third strike past Gerry Priddy, the first of the three times he was to accomplish that trick during the night.

The Nats were a futile crew against Newhouser until the fourth and then they fluffed an inviting scoring chance after Noren singled and Vernon doubled with one out. Mele grounded to Kell, compelling the runners to hold up, and Newhouser purposely walked Ostrowski to get at his pet, Dente. Then he fanned him.

The Tigers' fourth run, scored in the seventh was sort of cheap. It commenced with a single to left by Kolloway, who scrambled all the way to third when Ostrowski bobbled the hit. Newhouser promptly scored him with a single to center.

Newhouser's dreams of a shutout were jolted all of a sudden with two out in the eighth. Lipon's wild throw on Yost's grounder gave the Nats a break and they pressed it immediately. Michaels hit his first homer in a Washington uniform, a long smash into the left field seats to cut the Tigers' lead to 4-2.

But the Tigers got that run right back against Haynes in the ninth on Lipon's single, Priddy's double to left and Keel's long fly.

And you know what happened in the Nats' ninth. It wasn't very inspiring.

IN SHORT . . . Gil Coan may return to the Nats' lineup tonight when Freddie Hutchinson pitches for the Tigers. Chico Marrero will be the Washington pitcher . . . Umpire Cal Hubbard was impatient last night in the second inning when Mickey Vernon squawked over a pitch that was called a strike. When Vernon desired to argue, Hubbard virtually invited Newhouser to quick-pitch him . . . Yost and Michaels backed Evers and Groth to the fences for their long drives in the first inning . . . The pre-game rains cost the two clubs 5000 admissions, it is estimated . . . Sam Dente made all the plays in the fourth inning, throwing out Kolloway and Newhouser on ground balls and spearing Lipon's line drive.

House Okays $50,000 for Eastern High

The House yesterday unanimously approved and sent to the Senate the bill to enlarge and provide lights for Eastern High's stadium.

Brought up by District Committee Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.), the bill, which appropriates $50,000 for the job, was approved by a voice vote.

The measure would enable the D. C. Commissioners to double the seating capacity of the stadium to 10,000 and install modern lighting equipment for night athletics.

Yesterday's action was a long step toward doing something about the long neglected high school athletic program.

All the high schools in the District system will have a chance to use the stadium and profit from the increased revenue expected from night contests.

ACREAGE, SALE 75

MARYLAND

ACREAGE—ACREAGE—ACREAGE
Would you like to know the man who has made more fortunes in acreage than any other man in Washington? Mr. Charles C. Glover, late president of the Riggs Nat'l Bank. He was a farm boy from one of the Carolinas. He sought employment in the old Corcoran & Riggs Bank and made good. And it was through his ability he formed the Riggs Nat'l Bank. He was not only the most successful buyer of acreage but he was successful in everything. I bought acreage from Mr. Glover in Chevy Chase at $3000 per acre that he bought at $70 an acre and now some of that same land after I developed it is worth a million per acre. When I was building Chevy Chase, D. C., I received continuous letters from a man who wanted to sell me land in Bethesda, which is now the shopping center, at $500 per acre and it's now worth a million an acre. I knew this land was cheap at $500 per acre at the time, but I had my hands full with Chevy Chase. Now I have some other acreage farther out in the same zone and I believe it will become a shopping center some day. This acreage is where the Bradley & River Roads merge together overlooking the Congressional Country Club and this ground is now a great traffic center and where a traffic center comes shopping centers usually come. I have about a mile and half front on River & Bradley Roads in other words all front, only about 62 acres left. I am building my own home on the other. My home fronts River Road right opposite the entrance to the Congress, C. C. This hill is the finest setting for a home in this part of the U. S. It is a far more beautiful setting than the White House where Mr. Truman lives. I am in my 84th year, I'm settling my own estate; you can have the remaining of this acreage at 15c per sq. ft. if you take it all. I believe it will be worth a million in time. River and Bradley Roads form 2 of the most important gateways to Washington. To give you an idea of what these gateways mean, the three gateways on the Va. end of our 3 great bridges, all of that land and the shopping centers, all of it is worth a million per acre. Do a little figuring in your head and see if you can't make a fortune out of acreage. You can reach me at my home, WO. 0933. Fulton R. Gordon, Owner.

LOST

By Georganne Williamson

BOB SIMPSON is a rare species of band leader. He made good in show business by staying home. Washington—the town where people ask where the night clubs are concealed—has kept him busy for 17 years.

Now he's starting off a new period of bandleading for the Hotel 2400's Lounge Riviera.

After six or eight months of coaxing and encouraging, Manager Garland Boone has finally drawn Simpson into his dark and mirrored night spot.

But Simpson, to go, had to leave the better part of his quartet behind. That's Frank Coviello, pianist extraordinaire, who has now taken over th spot Simpson vacated at the Old New Orleans and formed a band of his own.

However, as Simpson says, you can't have everything, and he now has as pianist the Florian Zabach man, Lee Burney. That's about as good as can be had, and in addition Bob Knight, the Lounge Riviera bandleader before him, left behind a pert and pretty songstress, Lois Agee. In the fall, Simpson wants to add the finishing touch with a special accordianist he's negociating with.

Roberta, exotic looking clairvoyant, came over to the Lounge Riviera from the Old New Orleans at the same time as Simpson. She's an ex-show girl who has been reading for the stage folk ever since she got out from behind the spotlights herself. Various bookings have taken her around the country and out to Hollywood to make movies.

The room the Simpson boys are inhabiting is popular with the younger set. It's dark enough to be quite romantic about whoever your date may be, and the floor is large enough for plenty of dancing. There's just a small minimum on Friday and Saturday nights.

Bob Simpson, when asked how he managed to find Washington so fruitful, explains his career this way.

Starting out point was the old Gingham Club. Then two years as Barnee's side man at the Shoreham initiated him into his business, and he went on to spend several years with Sidney at the Mayflower Lounge.

He branched out with his first band at the Carlton — it had about 8 pieces. NBC studio playing and four years with Sam Jack Kaufman at the Capitol Theater followed. Next he formed his own band again at the Old New Orleans, where he has become the favorite of many a night-owler in the last three years—and now on to Hotel 2400.

THE Jones Brothers are filling the house—this time the Windsor Room on H st, as they have everytime they've been in Washington. They've being held over another two weeks. For smoothness, precision in working together, and just plain joy at the idea of entertaining, the Jones Brothers can't be beat.

Matt Windsor seems mighty happy these days—says they're doing a fine job. He mysteriously refers to a group he's negotiating with now. They'll be here in two weks, he says, are nationally popular, but have never been in Washington before.

The Federal Diary by Jerry Kluttz

Action Taken to Clarify Job Rights of Employes Entering Armed Services

The job rights of Federal workers who enter the armed forces are being clarified.

Labor Secretary Tobin yesterday explained that the 1948 Selective Service Act guaranteed reemployment rights for at least three years to most Federal workers who enter military service. It makes no difference, he said, whether an employe is inducted, is a volunteer, or is a reservist. The employe is entitled to reemployment rights in any event.

The Civil Service Commission is drafting a similar statement. It will inform agencies that job rights are limited legally to employes with permanent status. As a matter of policy, however, most war service people who participated in World War II were restored to their civilian jobs.

In addition, a committee of the Federal Personnel Council is beginning a study of the possible effect of the Korean crisis on Federal personnel, and how employes who enter military service should be given job protection.

In the meantime, the Defense agencies are reported to be drawing up a policy to cover their reserve officers who are in civilian jobs. A policy along these lines has been suggested:

That the Army, Navy, and Air Force be given up to four months to find a civilian replacement for any reserve officer in one of their civilian jobs who is called into active service. That the time could be extended to a year in a few exceptional cases.

Other Federal agencies with a sizable number of reservists also are debating the same problem.

Also on the personnel front, the Civil Service Commission has assigned top staff members to the Army, Navy, and Air Force in order to give them the quickest possible service. The commission representatives have wide power to approve the hiring of new employes, to approve job allocations, etc. A similar system was highly successful during World War II.

The commission, meantime, is merely looking into the possibility of setting up a war service system, if and when it is needed. The proposal is being talked in a general way; nothing specific. The Korean situation would have to get far worse before the commission would even think seriously of setting aside competitive tests.

Incidentally, many Federal officials and employes alike appear to have jumped to a false conclusion—that the commission is preparing to go on a war basis under a bill reported to the House yesterday. These are facts:

The President today has sweeping power to suspend Civil Service under the Act of 1883, the same authority used to set up a war service system during the last war. No additional law is needed either by the President or the Civil Service Commission to suspend all or part of the merit system.

But now before the House is a new bill by Chairman Murray of the House Civil Service Committee to give Federal agencies broader power to recruit and examine job applicants. The legal experts merely wanted to be sure the President retained his power to suspend—hence the amendment to give it to him. That's all there is to the story.

LEAVE: The Senate rider aimed at restricting annual leave would actually benefit a good many Federal workers. Here is why:

As adopted by the Senate Appropriations Committee, the rider would require employes to take annual leave earned this year before June 30, 1951, or else they'd lose it.

It would give thousands of employes who will have more than 60 days accumulated by the end of this year an extra six months in which to take this year's leave. For example, an employe who has 65 days of leave would lose 5 days as of January 1. The rider would give another six months in which to take it.

$118 Million Fund For D. C. Is Voted

Congress yesterday approved a $118,049,256 District appropriation bill and sent it to President Truman. Both houses approved the figure worked out earlier by a conference committee.

A House subcommittee today will begin considering additions which would raise the city budget for the current fiscal year to about 120 million dollars. The budget for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, was $110,269,954.

Representative Joe B. Bates (D., Ky.) presented the 118-million-dollar compromise bill to the House shortly after noon and it was approved by a voice vote. Senator Lister Hill (D., Ala.) called it up for Senate action about 5:30 p. m. and a unanimous voice vote gave it final clearance to go to the White House.

A report detailing the conference compromise will be printed by today.

Still at issue in Congress is how much the Federal Government will contribute toward financing the record city budget. A statute says the payment is to be 12 million; the House voted this year to cut the figure to $10,800,000, and the Senate has tentatively voted to boost the figure back to 12 million.

Local taxpayers pay the rest.

Representative Bates said that it was in the interest of avoiding future tax boosts that his House conferees insisted on almost a million dollars' worth of reductions below the 119 million dollar budget figure earlier approved by the Senate upon recommendations of the subcommittee headed by Hill.

But the final compromise was a big writeup of the 113-million-dollar total for which Bates earlier won House approval.

Water System Provision

Funds to start the East Capitol st. bridge across the Anacostia River and to launch a speedup in improvements to the Washington water supply system were kept in the final bill. A $2,943,000 sewer construction fund, half a million more than the House first granted, was also kept in the bill.

A "horsetrading" decision was to grant $635,000 for District payments to private hospitals for the care of indigent patients here. The commissioners had asked $745,000; the House cut it to $500,000; the Senate restored it to $745,000, and the conferees sliced it back to $635,000.

Officials of the hospitals have repeatedly protested they go in the red to give the service even at the payment level represented by the commissioners' budget request.

The conference group trimmed more than 40 other items by amounts ranging from $200 to $254,000. The latter represented postponement of funds for keying Washington streets to the East Capitol st. bridge, according to Bates. He said that part could wait until later. He said it did not represent a cut in the bridge funds.

A $125,000 cut was ordered in the funds for District payments to St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Other paring:

1. Erased a $5000 item for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth to be held next December.

2. Left but $8000 of the $15,800 sought to give the District Redevelopment Land Agency its first administrative funds. The slum clearance organization has had no money to work with since it was formed by Act of Congress in 1946.

3. Fixed an average eight percent cut in the level of contract authorizations for school building and other public improvement projects. The authorizations state the cost limit of the projects, and let the Commissioners contract to get the work done with assurance later appropriations will be made to cover the cost. The House had trimmed the authorizations 15 percent and the Senate five percent.

4. Threw out of the bill $40,000 for land to enlarge the Anacostia High School playground.

5. Dropped a $7500 fund for planning improvements in the Central Library Building.

Defense Measure

Haste Asked On Parkway To Baltimore

The Senate was advised yesterday by its Public Works Committee to rush approval of the Washington-Baltimore Parkway in the interest of national defense.

The committee, in a morning meeting, approved the parkway bill in the form adopted by the House. Senator John L. McClellan (D., Ark.) then presented the measure to the Senate with a report declaring:

"The committee has been impressed by the strategic value of this parkway to the national defense and it therefore urges that the Senate take prompt action."

The bill authorizes a 13 million dollar fund, to be appropriated later for building the parkway form Washington to Fort Meade, Md. It will link there with the Fort Meade-Baltimore section being built by Maryland.

"In time of emergency the parkway will be available for movement of troops between Fort Meade and Baltimore and Washington, and will provide easy access to the new Baltimore Municipal Airport," McClellan's report said.

He also pointed out that the committee wrote into the separate Federal-Aid Highway bill authority to get started with the Washington-Fort Meade parkway section in the current fiscal year.

The general highway bill, authorizing funds for the period from July 1, 1951, through June 30, 1953, includes a total of about 8 million dollars for the District for this period.

Contractors, Craft Unions Bury Hatchet

Agree to Withdraw NLRB Charges, Pull Off Pickets in Beauchamp Dispute

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

In the midst of war tensions, peace was restored in the Washington area's booming construction industry yesterday.

The Construction Contractors Council, an organization of employers, agreed to withdraw its charges of unfair labor practices, and the AFL Building Trades Council, an organization of craft unions, agreed to withdraw its pickets from the building projects of Victor R. Beauchamp, Inc.

At the same time, the AFL ironworkers agreed to return to work on the Beauchamp jobs and let the AFL jurisdictional disputes board settle its complaint about the AFL carpenters installing aluminum-frame windows in one of Beauchamp's buildings under construction.

$1,000,000 Jobs Shut Down

In the middle of June, the AFL ironworkers refused to show up for work on any of Beauchamp's projects in a dispute over the installation of 50 windows. The construction jobs, costing around one million dollars, were completely shut down two weeks later when the AFL Building Trades Council set up pickets, with "unfair" signs, at the projects. The council charged that Beauchamp refused to sign an agreement with the council that he would hire only union subcontractors on his jobs.

Beauchamp countered through his bargaining agency, the Construction Contractors Council, by filing unfair labor practice charges with the National Labor Relations Board against two ironworkers locals and the AFL Building Trades Council.

The NLRB had made its investigation and was about to issue its report on Wednesday, when the disputants asked for a little more time to settle the difficulties themselves. At this point, Henry Kaiser, for the labor group, and Attorney Francis J. Kelly, for the management group, arranged for a settlement.

Each to Recognize Each

It was agreed that the union crafts would return to work on all Beauchamp jobs, that the AFL Building Trades Council would recognize the Construction Contractors Council as the collective bargaining representative for some general contractors; and that the contractors would recognize the AFL Building Trades Council.

As to the dispute between the AFL carpenters and ironworkers, this was left up to the AFL jurisdictional disputes board. This board had refused to act on the window dispute until the ironworkers returned to work.

The affected Beauchamp projects include a church, office building, and renovation job in the District; a church school, an office building, and a school cafeteria in Silver Spring.

Youth Drowns After Toppling From His Boat

A 19-year-old youth drowned in the Georgetown Channel at 2 p. m. yesterday when he was thrown from his outboard motor-powered rowboat opposite Fletcher's boathouse.

He was identified as Vincent Steiner, of 2400 Chain Bridge rd.

Police said about 20 persons saw Steiner topple into the water when the boat swerved suddenly. Several of them tried to rescue him. Although the water was only 7 feet deep at the spot, they could not locate him.

Fire Rescue Squad No. 1 located the body. The rescue squad worked over the youth for 30 minutes, trying to revive him, before he was pronounced dead.

After Steiner was thrown into the water, his boat continued on and ran aground on the bank.

Dentist Fined On Reckless Driving Count

Weaving in Traffic Costs $100; Cleared On Drunk Charge

Dr. F. F. Sheller of Kensington, Md., with dentistry offices at 1722 I st. nw., was fined $100 yesterday for reckless driving by Trial Magistrate Alger Y. Barbee in Rockville Police Court.

He was acquitted of a charge of drunken driving.

Corp. Paul Alexander and Patrolman Herbert R. West of the Bethesda substation, Montgomery County Police, said the dentist's car was weaving and that he could not walk unassisted when arrested February 20 on Connecticut ave. near Watkins ave., Chevy Chase.

Dr. Sheller said he had been suffering the effects of sedatives taken after he had two teeth extracted two days before and said he had gone out to get some air. He admitted having taken three cocktails earlier in the evening, but insisted he was sober.

Judge Barbee told him that he, "of all people, should know the effects of sedatives and you should be condemned for driving under such circumstances."

Two Newsboys Injured When Bike Hits Car

Two newspaper carriers were injured last night when a bicycle on which the pair was riding crashed into a parked car after swerving to avoid an oncoming auto.

Police reported that Bernard H. Barbour, jr., 17, of 1633 O st. nw., and Vernice Long Lee, 10, of 1417 17th st. nw., suffered serious head injuries in the accident which took place on Pennsylvania ave. and 13½ st. nw. Barbour was admitted to Emergency Hospital and Lee, to Children's.

In the heavy downpour about 6:40 p. m. at Chesapeake st. and Connecticut ave. nw., one car halted at the rain-swept intersection. Behind it four others slithered to a stop safely. But a sixth car ran into the rear of the fifth car starting a chain reaction ending with the entire row of autos locked together.

'Hoppy' Thrills Small Fry In Big Top

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

Cole Brothers Circus, featuring Hopalong Cassidy in the flesh—in the person of William Boyd, that is—opened yesterday at the circus grounds, Benning rd. and Oklahoma ave. ne.

The 52-year-old "Hoppy," who began 30 years ago as a perennial college boy lover in the silent films, looked as if he had just stepped out of a television screen as he appeared astride his faithful Topper.

Wearing his all-black Western outfit, a polka-dotted blue neckerchief knotted about his throat, his appearance under the billowing Big Top was greeted with "oohs" and "ahs" by the some 2000 persons, most of them small fry, in the half-filled tent.

"Hi, Hoppy!" they shouted, many of them starting from their seats to get a closer view, as he rode around the ring waving his 10-gallon hat. "Hi, Kids!" he called back.

Backs Parental Authority

Loping back into the center ring, alone with his audience, the cowboy hero of screen, television books, comic strips, candy bars and other merchandise said, "Thank you for inviting me into your homes . . . You are the best behaved children I have ever seen . . . I hope you are going to continue to mind your fathers and mothers."

"Hoppy," who did no tricks with lariat or six-shooter, told them about his white horse, too. Topper was 16 years old, Hopalong said and he had owned him for 13 years. They had worked together in 56 motion pictures.

Following his 10-minute personal appearance, Hoppy posed outside the tent for several news and amateur photographers, including a Navy lieutenant. Behind Cassidy stood his horse, wearing a saddle with elaborate silver mountings. A few yards away, a knot of about 40 children watched fascinated.

Earlier in the day Hopalong had visited Children's Hospital to cheer up the young patients, including one critically ill young leukemia victim.

Saddest Eyes in Christendom

Elephants, ponies and the big cats, equestriennes, high-wire artists, tumblers and Chinese jugglers—they were all there in the show that deserved a larger audience.

The clowns were plentiful and imaginatively attired. One of them, Happy Kellems, a veteran of 25 years in show business, who led the clown band, has what must be one of the saddest pairs of eyes in Christendom.

Asked where he was born, Harry Kellems replied cheerfully: "Hoosier by birth. Texan by choice, Republican by experience and Democrat for financial reasons."

If Hopalong Cassidy was the big moment, Bruno Zacchini, the human projectile, was the booming climax of the spun pink sugar candy and sawdust afternoon. With a red orange flash and earsplitting boom he shot out of the silver cannon into the net. The net held.

Performances will be given again today and Saturday at 2:30 and 8:30 p. m., and at 2:30 Sunday.

Roustabout Stabbed in Circus Row

Elephant Keeper Punctuates Toughness Boast With Knife

A running argument over who was tougher, between a Cole Bros. Circus roustabout and an elephant keeper, ended yesterday with the roustabout in critical condition from stab wounds.

Charles Blackburn, 32-year-old roustabout in the cook tent, was rushed to Casualty Hospital for emergency surgery.

Homicide detectives said Blackburn and the elephant keeper had been boasting for a week that each could whip the other.

Yesterday's session, the elephant keeper told police, culminated in the menagerie tent, on the circus grounds at Oklahoma ave. and Benning rd. ne., after Blackburn told him: "You never saw the day you could whip me," and swore at him.

Thereupon, the elephant keeper said, he stabbed his adversary in the stomach with a pocket knife. Blackburn has been with the circus for five months.

Charged with assault with a deadly weapon at the Ninth Precinct was John Edward Galbraith, 20, who has been with the circus since June 21. He was previously a merchant seaman.

Future Plans For Growth Of D. C. Area To Be Shown

Exhibit at Corcoran By Two Commissions Proposes Eradication Of Slums in District

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

The Nation's Capital has a "tradition of fine housing for some; a tradition of miserable housing for others."

That statement, printed on a Corcoran Art Gallery wall, strikes the dominant note of the Sesquicentennial exhibit entitled "Plan of Washington — Past, Present and Future."

The exhibit pulls no punches in underscoring the need for bold area-wide planning.

It in effect challenges private and public housing interests to join planners in redeveloping the District's spreading slum areas before it's too late.

Through dramatic maps, relief models, photographs and population data, visitors will gain a picture of the Capitol and stately Mall surrounded by, but hiding, "gray" deteriorating neighborhoods.

The display was prepared by the National Capital Park and Planning and Fine Arts Commissions with funds allocated by the Sesqui commission. It was designed by Oscar Stonorov, noted Philadelphia architect.

On View Through November

The exhibit opens to the public Monday from 8 p. m. to 10 p. m. Thereafter it will be open during the regular Corcoran Gallery hours until the end of November.

To Washington residents, the biggest eye-catcher probably will be a series of diagramatic maps from the long-awaited "Comprehensive Plan for Washington," on public view for the first time.

These maps give in expansive yet general terms the commission's idea of how the Washington area should be developed during the next 50 years for an expected two million population.

"Controlled or carefully guided decentralization of all Government activities seems to be the keynote of the midcentury plan," NCPPC summarizes its concept of future for the area.

As NCPPC sees it, the exhibition points up these three issues of the future:

First, "that the plan for the National Capital can no longer be restricted to the District of Columbia boundaries or even the immediate environs, but must spread over a vastly greater territory extending outward for a score or more miles into Maryland and Virginia."

Second, "That similarly, the activities of the Federal Government, essential to have at or near the Washington focus, must be distributed throughout the metropolitan region in an orderly, predetermined fashion."

Third, "That the planning commission's 1950 concept of the regional scope of the National Capital Plan, objectively developed with an eye to meeting human needs as well as those of Government agencies, may be as an important a landmark in the history of the Washington plan as the plan of the McMillan Commission of 1901."

Revived L'Enfant Plan

The McMillan Commission revived and restored the L'Enfant plan for the Mall and Federal building locations and extended the park system motif to the entire District.

Bulk of the exhibit pieces traces the growth of Washington from a sleepy city of 14,003 persons to a bulging world capital of nearly 300,000 today. It also shows the commission's proposals for park extensions and recreation.

In a preview showing, Stonorov gave reporters his impressions of Washington's challenge.

The L'Enfant and McMillan plans created grandiose settings for Federal buildings and monuments, he observed. "Now we must do the same thing, apply the same principle, to meeting the human needs of

Motorist Who Tried to Shake Officer From Car Is Convicted

A District Court jury took only 15 minutes yesterday to convict Otis Mitchell, 35, of assaulting Police Pvt. Vincent G. Lusby of the Fifth Precinct with a dangerous weapon.

The dangerous weapon was an automobile operated by Mitchell on the night of May 27.

Lusby testified that he saw Mitchell's car hit a streetcar platform at 8th st. and Virginia ave. se. He investigated. He put his foot on the running board and Mitchell drove off, with Lusby hanging on, the officer said.

In a wild ride that followed, Lusby said Mitchell tried to brush him off against four different parked cars. Lusby was taken to Providence Hospital.

Mitchell, of 637 S. Carolina ave. se., has already been convicted of seven traffic violations stemming from the ride, and was sentenced to serve 90 days in jail and pay a fine of $175.

District Files 9 More Suits In Dupont Circle Building Case

The District Government made it 45 to 0 against the Dupont Circle Building yesterday.

Building Inspector Charles O'Connell filed nine more suits against the owners of the 12-story structure at 1346 Connecticut ave. nw. charging operation of an office building without a permit.

Ducirco, Inc., was convicted of the same charge in February and fined $50. At that time O'Connell started filing three suits a week, charging the corporation with daily offenses. The rate was stepped up to six a week in June.

The suits charge that the structure was built as an apartment house to withstand a 40-pound per square foot live load, while District regulations require a 70-pound limit for office buildings.

Ducirco contends the building was occupied during the war as an office structure by the Federal Government. The company tried to force the District in court to stop prosecuting and to issue an office building permit, but Judge Edward A. Tamm denied the motions.

Attorney Dennis K. Lane said the company has submitted plans for remodeling to the District authorities but has received no answer.

The company faces a maximum fine of $100 for each offense, if convicted.

Gala Parade Opens Falls Church Fair

Injection Fatal

Gallinger Death Probe Under Way

The coroner's office yesterday was investigating the death of a woman at Gallinger Hospital, apparently from a rare allergy reaction to an injection of procaine.

The woman, Mrs. Gladys E. Jackson, 25, of 2147 Newport pl. nw., died at 4: p. m. Wednesday, 15 minutes after the injection was administered by a staff physician at Gallinger.

An investigation was conducted at the hospital by Dr. Joseph Fazekas, chief of staff, and Dr. Richard Whelton, medical superintendent. Dr. Christopher J. Murphy and Dr. Richard M. Rosenberg, deputy coroners, were making a separate inquiry.

Dr. Whelton said Mrs. Jackson was admitted to Gallinger June 12 suffering from rheumatic arthritis. She developed hives. After other treatments for the hives failed, he said, a specialist recommended the injection of procaine.

Mrs. Jackson was given only one-tenth of what would normally be a lethal dose, Dr. Whelton stated. He said the hospital investigation showed the woman probably died because of a severe allergy to the pain-killing durg.

Deputy Coroner Murphy said an autopsy showed Mrs. Jackson died of acute heart failure, probably brought on by administration of the procaine. Dr. Murphy said chemical and microscopic examinations of the vital organs will be made.

A coroner's jury was sworn in over the body yesterday.

Within the next two weeks, Falls Church residents will learn the location of their first public recreation park, Mayor Albert M. Orme said last night.

His announcement was made during opening ceremonies of the annual Falls Church Fair, held on Hillwood ave., opposite Falls Church High School. Fair proceeds —totaling over $10,000 for the past four years—go toward establishing the new family play area.

A colorful street parade, complete with bathing beauties, floats and patriotic marching groups, ushered in the four-day event at 7:30 p. m.

It was held despite a half-hour downpour just prior to parade time which scared away three of the scheduled four bands. A scheduled band concert by the Alexandria Civic Band was washed out.

George A. Stewart, president of the Falls Church Community Park, Inc., introduced Mayor Orme at informal ceremonies held on the rain-soaked fairgrounds.

The mayor paid tribute to the men and women who over the past four years had done so much toward making the city's first public recreation park almost a reality.

During the next four days, special contests and special events are scheduled, including a beauty contest to select "Miss Northern Virginia." Eliminations started last night, and the winner will be named Sunday night.

people who make up our Government."

The "key" to the area's planning problem today is the redevelopment of the interior of the District, he said, explaining central Washington now is in stiff competition for business with the fast-growing surburbs.

Some highlights of the comprehensive plan as told by the exhibit maps:

1. Three circumferential roadways, all in the planning stage with no precise locations fixed as yet. Generally the inner ring would run just west of the Capitol, to Maine ave. sw., and connect Potomac Park and Rock Creek and run northerly at about Florida ave. nw.

The intermediate ring is Fort Drive which will skirt the inner periphery of the District about 5 miles from the central business area.

The outer ring route is conceived to run through Maryland and Virginia on a radius of about 10 miles from the Capitol beyond the fringe of present urban development.

2. Spotting Government agencies throughout Maryland and Virginia along the outer ring roadway close to large housing and shopping projects.

3. In the District, the planners give most attention to their proposed face-lifting in the East Capitol area where it outlines redevelopment of the East Capitol axis with public and semi-public buildings of low density, parks and a large sports area.

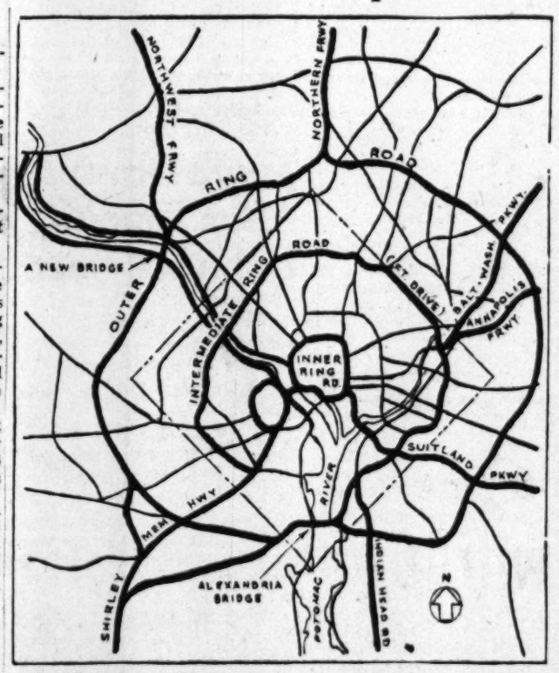
4. Slums: The comprehensive plan locates the well-known blighted areas in two classes; those which can be saved through repairs and those which should face complete slum clearance.

It offers a general redevelopment plan for what the commission considers the worst slum spot in the District—the blocks bounded by 7th st. nw., New York, Rhode Island, and New Jersey aves. nw. No other slum areas were touched in any detail.

For this area, the planners give a pattern for possible redevelopment. It would include a mixture of row houses, single-family dwellings and apartments arranged around park and school facilities. The plan takes into account commercial property and parking facilities.

In adjoining gallaries, the Fine Arts Commission has an exhibit giving particular attention to historic pictures, maps and models illustrating the upbuilding of the city from the standpoint of fine arts.

The District public library and the Columbia Historical Society has also placed on display several rare books and prints of old Washington.



DIAGRAM—This drawing shows the general locations of the metropolitan thoroughfare plan as proposed by the National Capital Parks and Planning Commission. The three circumferential roadways are still in the planning, or land acquisition stage. The inner ring would connect Potomac and Rock Creek parkways. The intermediate ring is the long-planned Fort Drive route. The outer ring would circle Washington through Maryland and Virginia on roughly a 10-mile radius from the District

Housework Easy Without Nagging Backache

As we get older, stress and strain, overexertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.

If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait. try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While these symptoms may often otherwise occur, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

Illegal Slot Machines Laid To Pier Owner

Fredericksburg, Va., July 13 (AP).—Commonwealth's Attorney Horace T. Morrison of King George County today charged the owners of the pier at Fairview Beach, Potomac River resort, with illegally operating slot machines and selling beer without a Virginia license.

He contended that offshore waters there are in Virginia, not Maryland, when the boundary is measured according to the Compact of 1785 between the two states.

Beer is sold and slot machines are operated at Fairview Beach pier under Charles County, Md., licenses.

Warrants were issued against Mrs. Ida L. Sonnenberg, Fairview Beach owner.

Morrison said Fairview Beach, located about 15 miles east of Fredericksburg, is situated in "a sort of cove between two big headlands extending north and south. He quoted the compact as follows:

"The low water mark on the Potomac to which Virginia has a right in the soil is to be measured . . . from the low water mark at one headland to the low water mark at another, without following indentations, bays, creeks, inlets or affluent rivers."

"I contend that the State of Virginia has jurisdiction for criminal purposes" over the pier, Morrison said, promising "to make every effort" to prove that is true.

The prosecutor said no bond will be required of Mrs. Sonnenberg. Both alleged offenses are misdemeanors.

Advised of the action, Mrs. Sonnenberg's attorney, C. O'Conor Goolrick, cited a map which he said was accepted by the Virginia Legislature in 1928 indicating Fairview Beach is in Maryland.

The map to which he referred was made by William A. Nelson, Virginia State geologist, and Edward B. Mathews, Maryland State geologist.

Belgian Conductor Masters Vocabulary to Lead Concert

The Washington Post

Conductor Fernand Quinet, Soloist Gladys Swarthout study score

By Paul Hume
Post Reporter

"Quickly," and "slow" are the two words of English spoken by Fernand Quinet, Belgian conductor, who will lead tonight's Watergate concert.

Quinet, conductor of the Lieges Symphony, arrived for his first visit to the United States early this week. Before his first rehearsal with the orchestra yesterday morning, he said (in French): "If things do not go well, I will throw myself in the Potomac."

Things must have gone well, since Quinet looked hale and happy in his hotel suite yesterday afternoon where he was meeting his soloist for tonight, Gladys Swarthout, favorite American singer.

"Quickly," Quinet would say to himself. Then, continuing again in French, "It's a nice word—it says just what it means." When asked how he tells an orchestra what he wants, when he does not speak their language, Quinet laughed as if he had heard that one before.

"I have conducted in Czechoslovakia before the Iron Curtain went down—the Czech Philharmonic—and I have conducted in Spain. And I do not speak Czech or Spanish. Musicians understand — they all speak the same language."

Quinet will conduct the popular symphony of Cesar Franck tonight, "Belgian night." Franck was born in Lieges, which is now Quinet's home.

Miss Swarthout, making her annual return to the Watergate, said she is looking forward to singing with the visiting conductor. All the songs she is singing on the second half of the program are by request. Quinet was brought to Washington by the Belgian government as a salute to the Sesquicentennial concerts being played this year.

Before breaking up yesterday's interview, Quinet said, "Oh yes, I have learned a new English phrase. I can say 'I must go to sleep now.' "But, he ended, "I never say that during rehearsal."

Pair Charged With Raping

Fairfax Police charged two Alexandria men with rape after a woman claimed they assaulted her repeatedly on a road near Engleside, Va., early yesterday.

Mrs. Barbara Scott, 24, of the Dunbar Hotel, said the men accosted her and a companion, James Almond, 22, of 101 U st. nw., in downtown Washington, forced them into their auto, and drove to Virginia, where the supposed attack took place.

According to Mrs. Scott, Almond later fled from the car and summoned police who arrested the two men. Police identified the pair as Carlton L. Murphy, 22, of 507 S. Henry st., and Thomas M. Lowery, 21, of RFD 1, both of Alexandria.

Murphy and Lowery denied the charge and told detectives they were solicited at Sixth and N sts. nw. by the pair. Assistant Fairfax Commonwealth's Attorney Wise Kelly reduced bond on the two men from $5000 to $2500 each. Hearing will be Monday at 10 a. m. in Fairfax Trial Justice Court.

Girl, 16, Hurt By Abductor's Push From Car

The screams of a 16-year-old Carmody Hills, Md., girl caused her burly abductor to push her from his automobile on a lonely Maryland road shortly before midnight Wednesday, Prince Georges police revealed yesterday.

Forced into the auto while walking home, the girl was shoved out along the George N. Palmer hwy., half a mile from the spot in Seat Pleasant where she was seized, police said.

Admitted to Casualty Hospital for observation, she was reported to have suffered possible head injuries, minor cuts and bruises and shock.

Detective Vincent Free said the girl told him she was not touched by her abductor except when he threw her into the auto and when he pushed her out after she screamed.

The assailant was described as about 40, heavy build and with gray hair. He was driving a 1948 or 1949 black Buick four-door sedan, police said.

Club Harlem Gets Back Its Drink Permit

In a reversal of a previous action, the District Commissioners yesterday restored the alcoholic beverage license of Club Harlem, 1815 7th st. nw.

On June 2, the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board revoked the restaurant's Class C liquor license. This was done because proprietor Paula B. Patterson was found guilty of falsely stating in her ABC license application that she then held a restaurant license. Three weeks later the Commissioners upheld the board by turning down her appeal.

Robert D. Wise, assistant corporation counsel in charge of prosecuting ABC cases, said testimony before the ABC Board indicated she had applied for the liquor license last December, but did not apply for a restaurant license until March.

Charles Stofberg, special assistant to Commissioner John Russell Young, said the Commissioners reversed themselves yesterday on the basis of new evidence showing that although Miss Patterson did not hold a restaurant license in December she had applied for it and had held one previously.

In another case, the ABC Board after a morning hearing yesterday issued a warning to the Globe Liquor Store, 620 7th st. sw., for failing to affix and cancel tax stamps on bottled beverages.

Two Men Held In Holdup Of Ex-Gambler

Two men, charged with armed robbery last March 13 at the Arlington home of the former gambler, Blight H. Lee, yesterday waived preliminary hearing in Arlington County Court and were held for grand jury action.

The two are Joseph G. Lewis, 29, of 1519 Park rd. nw. and George William Kiley, 26, of 332 Ridge rd. se. Bond was set at $3000 each.

Both are accused of participating in a holdup at the Lee home, 2700 S. June st., last March, in which two men escaped with $160, later called Lee and said they had expected to find $50,000 or $60,000 in the house.

County Court Judge Paul D. Brown dismissed charges against a third man, Paul Clifton Lewis, 36, of 3718 S. 3rd st., Arlington, charged with aiding and abetting the armed robbery. He said the evidence was insufficient.

Charges of attempted robbery were dropped yesterday by the Commonwealth against Bernard F. Mooney, 21, of 4105 Beall ave., Landover Hills, Md., and James Wallace Smith, 25, of 5120 T st. se., Bradbury Heights, Md.

Mooney, Smith, and Kiley were picked up by police late last Sunday, after the Lees reported three strange men in the vicinity of their home, one of whom resembled one of the earlier robbers.

One on the Aisle—

One Way to Gain A Ducal Coronet

By Richard L. Coe

"KIND HEARTS AND CORONETS," at the Trans-Lux, is a delectable comedy about the pleasures of murdering one's rich relations.

And in this blessless era of bulldozer-bloodletting, the precision of carefully choosing one's targets for extinction has an elegance the discriminating will appreciate.

For this is England in the spacious days of Edward VII, Victoria's patient son, when elegance was an art and social position came not by ascent but by descent. In a sparkling script by Robert Hamer and John Dighton from a novel by Roy Horniman we watch an ambitious man approach a dukedom from the lowly position of ninth at the post.

The seventh daughter of the sixth duke—well, I think he was the sixth—marries her Italian singing teacher and so is disowned by the family. She cannot forget Chalfont Castle, though, and after her baritone husband dies, she brings up their son, a Mazzini, with all the pride that outer relations have in family titles, which in this case can also descend through the female line. On her death the son goes to work in a clothing store and suffers bitter pangs when his greedy childhood girlfriend decides to marry a prosperous bore.

Gradually he realizes that if he is to get anywhere in this world he must press his claims to the family name. One relative is killed in a boating accident, another blows up in his photographic darkroom, a third goes down with his ship when, in typically D'Ascoyne stubbornness, he insists port is starboard.

A D'Ascoyne general, admiring his Russian caviar, is blown up when it explodes. A suffragette D'Ascoyne, dropping leaflets from a balloon over Hyde Park, falls to her death when an arrow pierces her conveyance. A bibulous vicar meets his doom through overindulgence and the shooting Ethelred gets his from his own rifle.

But the ironic twist is not only in these pinpointings of sudden deaths, but in the romantic liaison of Our Hero with his childhood gal friend. Played with a husky snarl by Joan Greenwood, it is Sibella who finally points him toward destruction, though it is not, I assure you, the destruction you may expect for him. It's one of the funniest endings the flicks have given us in years.

Apart from the novel plot structure, there are some deft touches: Miles Malleson plays a hangman with as much snobbish zest as Mazzini, "silk for a duke"; the House of Lords is summoned for a duke's trial, which he can demand from his peers, and the family chapel scenes are for the books.

The unquestioned acting honors seem to go to Alec Guinness, who plays all the disappearing D'Ascoynes with most amusing flourishes; at a D'Ascoyne funeral you see most of the family in the same room, a neat photographic trick.

And while Guinness surely is succeeding in a neat tour-de-force, there are other polished performances in "Kind Hearts and Coronets" ("Kind hearts are more than coronets and simple faith than Norman blood"—Tennyson). Dennis Price, whom you're watching the entire film, is splendid as the choosy killer. Miss Greenwood is nothing less than wonderful as the ambitious paramour with the cracked voice and Valerie Hobson has a superb chill as the prim female, widowed through her second husband's guile.

Be not distressed, gentle reader, if this recital strikes you as a bit thick for your blood. It's immensely polite, heartily humorous and just the thing to take you back to a vanished past.

Bogart and Grahame Combine To Make a Swift Whodunit

By Orval Hopkins
Post Reporter

FRIENDS, it is my pleasure, if my embarrassment, to report that the whodunit at the Warner Theater, "In a Lonely Place," though even more ineptly named than the run of movies, is a good whodunit and I'd be pleased if the entire parish went over and saw it.

This is a circumstance which comes my way only rarely and I have in consequence gotten out Mr. Webster's big book, Fowler's English Usage, and Roget's Thesaurus in an attempt to cope with the situation.

The picture, which features Humphrey Bogart and Gloria Grahame, is nicely written, competently acted, well paced and thoughtfully directed. If you have any more adverbs feel free to use them. The story is about a screen writer, Bogart, who is accused of murdering a young woman. In the midst of this he meets Miss Grahame, a bit actress at liberty, and they fall like a couple of plugged ptarmigan. The rest of the movie is devoted to figuring out whether Bogey really knocked off the lass and to showing how Miss Grahame, though falling deeper and deeper in love with the writer, is at once assailed by a growing personal fear of the man, brought on by a raging temper to which he recurringly gives way.

This is my first experience with Miss Grahame. She's a fine young actress, in my opinion. As Bogart obligingly puts it at one point, she is "neither cute, coy, nor corney." Bogart seemed intent on proving that there's life in the old arm yet. Even in the sequences in which he is obliged to fly into tantrums, he does so with a remarkable economy of histrionics, which isn't a bad trick.

The picture is shored up by a cast which is capable all through. I didn't see a poor performance. These people include Frank Lovejoy, Carl Benton Reid, Art Smith, Jeff Donnell, Martha Stewart, Ruth Gillette and Robert Warwick—the latter gives a rich, hammy portrayal of a drunken, wornout actor.

The screen play is by Andrew Salt from a story by Dorothy B. Hughes adapted by Edmund H. North. Nicholas Ray directed. All ought to get an extra ration of pate de foie gras this week.

I object, as usual, to the musical score which accompanies the feature. It detracts from, rather than enhances, the dramatic pitch of the film. The title again, "In a Lonely Place." If you figure out what it means, please let me know.

"IN A LONELY PLACE," Columbia release produced by Henry S. Kesler-Santana. Screen play by Andrew Salt from a story by Dorothy B. Hughes adapted by Edmund H. North. Photographed by Burnett Guffey. Directed by Nicholas Ray. At the Warner.

Memos of a Girl Friday:

Dear Mr. W.: The ABC newsroom staff took time out to do some amazing research on your broadcasts—back to 1947. Wait'll you see what the files reveal—especially on Korea . . . If you knew what was happening over there, certainly official Washington must have known. And why they didn't do something about it is certainly going to make the people pretty sore . . . We think you ought to at least do a column on it—to remind all concerned that you weren't hysterical; that you weren't fearmongering; that you weren't an alarmist or any of the other names irresponsibly tossed at you by the uninformed and misinformed. The happenings in Korea in these first few miserable weeks are practicaly in your files word for word.

Over at Time mag. one top exec is slated for the Big Heave in Sept. Two top writers there have had their skids greased, too. All because they like the USA better than the USSR? . . . "Meet the Press" and Mutual have divorced, you know. The network plans replacing it with a similar program. If they do, there will be a terrific lawsuit. On the theory that a person has some proprietary rights to an object of his own creation . . . Bugs Baer's daughter and her groom will be named winners of the Robert Merrill contest of "best one-act American opera" tonight on "We the People." $1000 goes with the salute . . . The duPonts were told by the Gov't to prepare to cut the civilian output of nylon more than the 10 pc now in effect.

Drew Pearson may not be heard Sunday. In great pain from the operation . . . Carlyle Blackwell, silent screen star, is at St. Francis Hospital, Miami Beach, for major surgery . . . The Mayor O'Dwyer rumor is around again as we Tom Collins to press. Now they insist he has an offer at $100,000 a year. Even if it ain't true, I say he oughta take it . . . The Eddie Alberts (she's Marge, the actress, who can really act) are sooo excited over the news at their house. They have been sealed 7 years and were about to adopt a baby when "Well, waddaya know!" . . . Big story around that 40 teachers and students at Columbia have left for their home burgs. They expect N. Y. to be A-bombed. I intended phoning up there to check this, but if they have gone out of town, why waste the nickel?

The Sea Isle Club (Atlantic Beach) will be converted into a health resort—106 rooms. The late gangster Jack (Legs) Diamond was once its daddy . . . Billy Eckstine gets 3 more articles this month a total of 21 national mags since invading Broadway. (His press-agents are probably underpaid) . . . Gloria Swanson is now competing with Miss Dietrich for cheesecake are in the magzeens. At 51 yet! . . . No Pipple Like Show Pipple: Although Hildegarde's Paris booking was not too too-too, she took ads in several gazettes there thanking evvybuddy for Being Zooo Vundaful . . . Talk about Trouble coming in Bunches: On W. 56th Street last night a fellow who just got notice he was being shipped to Korea—found his parked car burgled of his only valuables. Fine way to leave to fight for your countrymen.

Have your irony this morning? Well, the August Movieland features a piece about Judy Garland's successful career in Hollywood, where she just lost her job . . . Terri Stevens, once the leading chorine at the Copa, is the new vogalist with Frankie Carle's crew . . . "The Red Shoes" has been advertising "last weeks" for the last 8 weeks and has no intention of leaving anyway . . . Barry Wood, who quit thrushing to be a CBS-tv producer, switches to NBC Aug. 1 . . . Bob Monroe has developed a new production tekneek for teevy drama. It'll shave costs only slightly higher than radio. He says it will electrify the trade . . . "Light Fantastic," the Fall revusical Capp & Johnson will parent (with Nancy Walker as star), was written by Mike Stewart. He's 23. When they say they're 23 they're 22.

Backers of "Harvey" haven't had any money from that goldmine since Brock Pemberton died six months ago. More than $1,500,000 is rotting in a local bank for distribution to angels, until a tangle can be ironed out with tax officials. They argue Mrs. Pemberton was not a partner "in fact" in the operation of the hit . . . Killjoy Dept.: The Winter Garden has put up curtains on the 7th Ave. side undressing rooms where Taft Hotel guests got such a free peep show. The Tassie Tosser (the bra flipper) in "Peep Show" was deleted by the censor, but in Boston where everything is banned the biggest attraction is Sally Keith, who does the same act.

Pretty Martha Stewart (loved her act with the Blackburn Twins) has the movie firms bidding for her artistry again. She's now in "In a Lonely Place," starring Bogy . . . Eileen Wilson's "Your Hit Parade" click is the talk of NBC-tv. This is a gal who rates all the sugary luck she's having. Nice guy type . . . Harvey Stone gets the break of his career August 21st when he headlines the London Palladium. Top dough and awl-thet, y'kno . . . That one show-girl leg which Mike Todd is putting on the Winter Garden frontage will be 160 ft. long . . . The Academy Award Watches (Bulova) are the only ones with legal permission to use that name . . . The Trib's editorialist says a critic finds Dr. Kinsey's researches soporific. The big sheau-awff means it put him to sleep.

Book columns confirm what you reported weeks ago. That Life's story about the Dook's abdication was bunk. The London Times says the account of the abdication is not "a true picture of what happened" . . . Berle has written a book, "Sit Still My Soul." The title comes from Shakespeare. Milton says it's not about Broadway. It's about Main Street. Also it's not a whodunit. It's prob'ly a whowroteit, although he swears he did . . . The Sugar Ray Robinson-Chas. Fusari bout (for the Runyon Fund Aug. 9th) is all set. Tickets can be had by phone at Plaza 7-6885-6-7 . . . Could that newspaperman who sold us out (in Bill Shirer's upcoming book) be Robert Best? . . . After all that unearned front-page publicity over here about bullfighter Mario Cabre stealing Ava from Sinatra—the studio doesn't even list the ham in the cast!

YESERDAY'S ANSWER

Godfrey's High Spirits Are Natural, Not Bottled

THE GODFREYS RELAX—In New York, the Great Godfrey gets little time to play, but at least on this one night he had time to do some of the spots with his wife and son, Richard. They're at the Stork Club, where celebrities go to look at other celebrities

TWO HARD WORKERS—The madhouse of a Godfrey day would probably have most of us snappy and surly, but not Arthur the Great, and his good right hand, Mug Richardson. The grin, the gentle humor that carries no barb—these are their daily stock in trade

(Sixth of a Series.)

By Jack O'Brian

When Arthur Godfrey awakens on Monday morning of any week—this, last, the next—he faces a program that would make a whirling dervish think he was spinning backward.

It's 9 a. m. and the sun peeps through the draperies of a two-room penthouse apartment atop the Lexington Hotel, which Godfrey has rented for many years, and where the staff of the hotel fills his most simple whim with the speed and affection usually reserved for people they like.

Maids scurry around on tiptoe until they hear him taking his shower. Then they know all is fine in the Godfrey world, and they whistle while they work and shout greetings to their favorite guy.

Breakfast is ready as he steps out of the shower. He eats it swiftly but without gulping, out of habit. Then he shaves, puts on jacket and slacks and goes downstairs. Greeting folks in the lobby is an accustomed, casual, pleasantly diffident affair, as any old neighbor might greet another on the way to work. After all, it's just another Godfrey workday.

At the curb he steps into a cab and is whisked to CBS' big studio on E. 52d st., where he walks in usually just in time to say howdy, talk five fast minutes with Mug Richardson about the day's program and with no more fanfare than that, Arthur Godfrey is on the air.

"This is the Pillsbury Program and let's have a song," is a typical beginning, and from then on the order of the day gets even more informal.

An hour and a half later, six sponsors are delighted that Godfrey even got around to mentioning their product at all, the Mariners have performed their musical chore, Janette Davis has sung brightly, Bill Lawrence has sent young hearts beating a bit faster and the Chordettes, a girls' barber shop harmony-style quartet has delivered itself of some mighty handsome feminine version of the best shaving music.

Nobody's nervous, no one's blood pressure is popping, ulcers are for other people's programs and all still is right with Godfrey's world.

Eleven-thirty is here and Godfrey takes his usual fast stroll out a door, down a corridor, across a street, up an elevator and into an office high up in the Columbia Broadcasting System's main office building on Madison ave.

"Hya, Bennie," he calls warmly to Miss Phyllis Benson, his private secretary, as he ambles by her desk and into his executive-style, handsomely neat but not gaudy office which looks out on the south and east sides of the building, away up where Arthur can enjoy the view. If there were no more view than an alleyway, it is more than certain he'd find something to admire about that. Just that sort of guy.

He picks up a telephone to talk to Larry Puck who's in charge of the office which handles applicants, auditions and the business of his evening TV and radio simulcast, "Arthur Godfrey's Talent Scouts."

Nothing ever keeps Godfrey on the telephone very long with Larry Puck, or Mug Richardson, whose office is in the CBS Studio Building at 49 East 52d st., across the way, and from which all the administrative red tape connected with the myriad Godfrey enterprises unwinds before they concern Godfrey himself.

Phyllis Rosenberg, Larry Puck's secretary, drops by to take up some brief matter with "Bennie." Godfrey's voice warms up her day, too, with a "Hya, Rosie!" There's an accountant, a girl assistant and other underlings in and out all day. It's an office run efficiently, without noise or hysteria, everyone at peace with everyone else.

"Know why Godfrey's organization is so well-oiled?" asked a delivery boy who dropped in with coffee for those too busy to get out to lunch that Monday.

I expressed my wonderment. The lad explained:

"This is a melting pot, this Godfrey outfit," he said admiringly. "Every sort of character you want to see works here. "Godfrey's Irish, I hear, and something else mixed in. That's good to start with.

"Then most of the people here have folks who came from the other side. There are Christians and Jews, a couple of colored people, an Italian guy, couple of Germans, kid who talks French like a native and I guess she was, and a couple of Litvaks and Galicianos.

"The Mariners' Quartet has two Negroes and two white fellows besides. It's like a little slice of New York City right here, a little bit of America the way we all want it. And know something? That's for me!"

And away he went, his dark skin alight with the satisfaction of such carefree, simple goodwill.

Godfrey's private Monday morning business having been swiftly put aside, I rejoined him in his office. He was on the telephone, looking out the window at a gray day, his startling red shock of hair, just a suspicion of tousle in it, lighting up his corner of the room. We sat back to talk.

"Yeah, I'm a salesman," he said. "I sell all sorts of things. They say I'm pretty good at it, I guess I am. But I'd like to be a better salesman about a few things that are closest to me.

"You know, as I get older—yep, I'm getting up there finally. I'm 46 now—life is getting a lot simpler. I'm not so crazy about a lot of things I used to think were so important. Like the fancy places, and being accepted in the right places. I got shoved around in enough of the right places to know they're strictly wrong joints to begin with.

"Right now, for instance, I'm getting in a few swipes for good government. Don't get it wrong, though. I'm not getting my nose caught in politics, mind you. But I've given a great deal of thought to a few things that need someone's attention.

"Good government, for instance. If we could get the right people in the right jobs—just think how much better this country, which is pretty wonderful already, could be! I keep harping on that as often as I can without getting my listeners bored. They don't have to be told too often, but they gotta be reminded.

"I'm doing what little I can, and I'm not going to let up on it, to take a poke at racial prejudice. Who needs it? Every time we knock down another racial bar, everyone is happier. No 'incidents' happen.

"Folks get along when they are encouraged to take a good, equal look at the next guy. And that's just about as much as I'm going to preach on that subject today."

Off he went on the subject of farming. Arabian horses. Hunters.

"I raise them, and the feed that makes 'em fine and big," he said.

Then aviation.

"Know one of the biggest kicks I ever got? Eddie Rickenbacker told me a little old woman walked into one of his company's offices and asked for a plane ticket. She said she never flew before but she had to get somewhere and Arthur Godfrey had told her over the air that flying is the safest way to travel.

"'If Arthur Godfrey says it's so, it's so,' this little old lady said, and took her first plane trip. When she got back home she announced she would never travel any other way again.

"I keep selling my fans on the fact that no airplane ever had an accident that couldn't be traced to human error. Airplanes don't kill anyone. Just man kills man. I've been flying 30 years and I want to keep right on flying 30 or 40 more."

Godfrey didn't mention how grateful the aviation industry is to him for his promotional good will. What's more, the aviation industry is honoring his many favors with a token gift within a few days—a big DC-3 passenger plane that has been knocked down and rebuilt entirely as a personal plane for Arthur Godfrey.

The whole aviation industry joined in—one firm presenting instruments, another an engine, others kicking in some tangible token of its esteem to turn the ship into the finest airplane of its kind anywhere.

Godfrey was so excited about it, and so humbled by the sheer bigness of the gesture, that he hasn't yet found adequate words to express his gratitude.

"I'm just not ready yet to talk about that," he said when I brought up the subject. "Nothing I could say would make me sound anything but hammy, so I ain't sayin' nothin'."

Man Detects Trend In Adventure Stuff

By John Crosby

I THINK I detect the distant rumbling of a small trend in adventure stuff. The girls are beginning to get into the act and the possibilities, as any fool can plainly see, are limitless. CBS television is trying out a new series called "The Detective's Wife," in which the emphasis, as the title states, is clearly on the feminine side of the household. And on NBC, you'll find "Top Secret" with Ilona Massey going through hell and high water on behalf of the Allies in the last war.

Ilona Massey

I haven't caught "The Detective's Wife," but I'm growing very fond of "Top Secret" (NBC-WRC 10:30 p. m. Monday). Miss Massey, a bundle of blonde allure with a Hungarian accent, is cast in the role of a spy of the femme fatale type which has not been seen in these parts since "Three Faces East." Of course, things have changed a good deal in the femme fatale racket since I was a boy. Back in those days, the girls used to wrest most of the enemies' secrets from them in the boudoir, exercising their feminine equipment in the traditional way.

Nowadays, if Miss Massey is any criterion, a girl's looks just get in the way. In "Top Secret," Miss Massey, who plays the part of Baroness Karen Something-Or-Other, is forced to employ her wits rather than her face; her arms are used to slug it out with the German espionage agents rather than for embraces; and her legs come in handy for that good old-fashioned, though not very romantic, purpose of running as fast as possible from the Gestapo. All the fun is gone out of the femme fatale business. It's just plain hard work. And dangerous, too.

Maid to Frau Goering

AS a preliminary to several of her recent adventures, Miss Massey wormed her way into the Hermann Goering household as personal maid to Frau Goering. The use of real names in adventure series is a new one on me. The program portrays Frau Goering as a querulous, decidedly unpleasant lady, and Hermann as a stupid, though sinister, lout. (Hermann was a lot of things but he wasn't stupid.)

During her stay with the Goerings, Miss Massey succeeded in plugging a leak in Allied intelligence in Tangiers, personally bumping off the Nazi counterspy with a monkey-wrench, and in discovering the plans and dates of A-Day, when the Germans planned to invade England. (That stopped the invasion cold.)

That last adventure cost her the job with the Goerings, which seemed rather a pity. I had begun to enjoy the Goerings as comedy characters. Hermann, for example, blew in one morning with the Mona Lisa as an anniversary present for his wife. Frau Goering was furious. Said she wanted a sable coat instead. She was right, too. The Mona Lisa turned out to be a fake.

She Gets Hit

THOUGH SHE is described as a woman of surpassing beauty, Miss Massey gets belted around almost as much as Sam Spade. In the last one, her leg was broken. Later, the cast was broken off her still-unhealed leg with a cane, an excruciating operation designed to save her from even worse torments at the hands of the Gestapo. She stood up under it nobly. Next week, I'm told, she's off to Rome, where she'll probably turn up as Mussolini's private secretary, beautiful as ever, though conceivably limping a bit.

Still, if you can overlook the essential malarkey, "Top Secret" is pretty good thriller stuff, tightly and completely written by Harry Junkin, and very well produced. My only objection to Miss Massey and her Hungarian accent is that, in moments of great stress, she sounds more like Peter Lorre than a beautiful blonde spy. This difficulty would be erased if they just put Miss Massey on television. Unless my instinct for trends has gone hopelessly to pot, Miss Massey, or someone very much like her, will be on television eventually. It—as they say in the trade—can't miss.

Summer Raises a Thirst, Fruit Juice Quenches It

By Lucia Brown

NOTHING under the summer sun is better than a long, cool drink—ice tinkling, glass frosting, beverage sparkling.

So draw up a chair and let's mix a few. They'll refresh young and old alike—kids tired from playing and grown-ups tired from just plain living with the hot weather. We'll sit in the shade and sip, and who knows? A cooling breeze may spring up to keep us company.

First let's consider citrus, age-old favorite for lemonade and such. Citrus drinks not only cool you but give you valuable vitamin C to help fight summer lassitude. Shall we make Pink Lemonade? Frothy Cooler? Quick Orange Punch? Take your pick. Or pass over these and make one of the other types of beverages that follow.

PINK LEMONADE

¾ cup sugar
¼ cup crushed red raspberries or strawberries or 2 tablespoons cherry juice
4 cups water
15 or 20 ice cubes

Add sugar to lemon juice. Stir until dissolved. Pour into pitcher with ice cubes and water. Stir in fruit or juice. Makes 4 or 5 tall glasses. Garnish with slices of orange or lemon and serve with fancy striped straws.

FROTHY COOLER

½ cup water
½ cup fresh lemon juice
1 pint plain or soda water
2 egg whites
Cracked ice

Boil sugar and water together for 7 minutes. Cool, add lemon juice, water, and egg whites. Shake or beat until frothy. Add cracked ice and serve in four tall glasses, topped with lemon slices.

QUICK ORANGE PUNCH

2 quarts of orange ice
4 quarts of ginger ale
2 quarts orange juice
Orange slices, lemon slices, mint sprigs

Place orange ice in punch bowl. Pour in fresh orange juice, and ginger ale. Garnish with orange and lemon slices and mint sprigs. This recipe will serve 40 to 50 punch cup portions.

SPECIAL ICED TEA

3 cups tea
1/3 cup lemon juice
Sugar to taste
6 slices orange
6 mint sprigs
½ cup orange juice
1 pint ginger ale

Make tea double strength and pour it over chopped ice or ice cubes. Add lemon and orange juice and as much sugar as desired. Add ginger ale when ready to serve. Serve with ice in tall glasses with sprig of mint and slice of orange in each glass.

COFFEE COOLER

1½ cups water
1½ cups milk
5 tablespoons chocolate syrup
½ pint chocolate or vanilla ice cream

Mix instant coffee and water in pitcher and stir until coffee is dissolved. Add milk and chocolate syrup and blend. Sweeten to taste. Chill. Pour into tall glasses and add about ¼ cup ice cream to each glass. Stir well and serve at once.

AMBER DELIGHT

1 cup sugar
1 cup fresh lemon juice
1 quart orange juice
4 tins apricot nectar (12 ounce size)

Combine and chill. Just before serving, add 3 quarts ginger ale. Pour in punch bowl and garnish with lemon slices. Serves 45 to 50.

P. S. As a glamor touch in serving punch at a party, you might like to try an ice punch bowl. These can be ordered from an ice company here in Washington, come in clear ice or pastel shades and hold about 1½ gallons of punch. They're hollowed-out blocks of ice into which the punch is poured for cooling and serving.

Market Memo

Tomatoes Here at Last

HOME-GROWN TOMATOES should be good news at your market this weekend. They're finally coming in quantity from southern Virginia. The wholesale price plummeted from $16 a bushel last Saturday to $5-$6 a bushel yesterday.

SALAD STUFFS in general are plentiful—radishes, onions, escarole, chicory, lettuce, cucumbers, green peppers. There's plenty of corn from North Carolina. New potatoes have jumped in price, though. Rainy weather's the reason. Fields have bogged down and the market supply is short.

MEAT is continuing its alarming rise. Pork loins, for instance, have gone up 15c a pound at wholesale in the past couple of weeks. Biggest step-up has been in fresh pork, but beef and cured pork are much higher, too. Least rise has been on lamb and veal.

CHICKENS have advanced some—about 5c on the pound in 10 days—but not so much as the red meats. It's anticipated they may go higher, but as of this writing small broilers are a good buy. Eggs are up around 3c a dozen in 10 days.

FROZEN FISH is your best bet if you stick to the seafood standard on Fridays. Rains in nearby waters and New England have kept the fisherman from bringing in a catch of any size lately. The salmon season is on out West—it started early in July—and a good many are reaching the Washington market. They're high, though.

Plastic Fabrics Make Fine Spreads, Covers

Now that plastics are available by the yard, many women are making their own plastic drapes, porch furniture pillows, slip covers and bedspreads. Many of the plastics may be sewn on the sewing machine like cloth.

New Fabric Will Be Used on Cars

It is hoped that orlon, the new textile developed as a member of the nylon family, will make an automobile top that will last for the life of the car. Resistance to sun and weather is one of its most valuable characteristics.

How Mad Can A Hatter Get?

By Peggy Preston

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 13.—It's hard to see how hats could get any wackier. But that's what they've gone and done.

Here in the hard center of American fashion design, the hat-happy artists are busily displaying their new wares this week, and it looks like they've had more fun than anybody.

When they haven't been dreaming up curious concoctions for us to put on our heads, they've been figuring out clever names with which to dub them.

There is Mr. John, for instance, who this season has produced the most astonishing collection of headgear, each piece named for a theater theme. And jovial Sally Victor, whose colorful bonnets are named for chessmen as well as for that sophisticate of dogdom, the French poodle. Walter Florell offers "turn of the century" top hats, derbies, homburgs, and fedoras, explaining that he's "borrowing from the boys."

What next is left for us, we wish to know?

Names of Hats Prove Fascinating

FOLLOWING Mr. John's collection is a taxing experience, one that constantly drags your eyes from chapeau to program. The names are easily as fascinating as the hats.

They are grouped according to the following titles: Stage Door Johnnies. Hocus Pocus Turbans, Theater Wings, Grande Finale. Individual hats in each of these groups go by such enticing monikers as Gentlemen Prefer Hats, John's Other Hat, Juvenile Lead, Naughty But Nice, Focusing attention on the hats themselves, we must admit there is much of the eye-catching value included.

John has a flair for creating unusual pieces. Like his fellow hatters, he has relied heavily on a polished felt, once known as hatter's plush. He calls it satin felt, and it actually looks like silk.

Sally Copies From the Poodle

SALLY VICTOR, who warns us "not to show this to your poodle," does all sorts of amusing things with mohair and wool yarns to simulate the carefully clipped curls of the elegant poodle. For additional variety, she does a series in honor of the ancient and honorable game of chess.

But Sally has maintained her feeling for color. She does a wonderful array of grays—the favorite neutral color of the season and there is a rich deep wine known as vintage red, a brilliant blue, and a coral that is unsurpassed.

Fall Hats Tend To Be Small

TO GET serious about hats, if it is really possible to do so, here, in general, is what they look like:

They tend to be small. But don't quote us. Sure as anything, you'll find the big hat you are looking for this fall.

They sit forward on the brow, leaving the back of the head quite exposed, subject to the breezes and an unbecoming haircut. They, like everything else in this season's fashions, reflect a Spanish influence. We see little toreador hats and padre's hats with upswept brims. Among those who have followed this line are Laddie Northridge, Mary Goodfellow, Emme, Braagard, Lenesta, Mr. John and Florell.

They take to face veiling, which helps them to hug the head and stay put.

They are either black, gray or a vivid color. Their fabrics are, usually, a polished felt, sleek and sophisticated.

They are frequently made of feathers. These can cup the face, in cloche fashion, or they may spring, startlingly, from the top of the brow.

They are covered with simulated jewels.

New Styles Are Two-Faced

New York, July 13.—Fashion accessories for fall are abundant and novel. Everything seems to be convertible or reversible, and the accessory that can play but one role is no longer in the running.

Weskits are around in plenty. They may be tweed on one side, black velvet on the other. A sort of day into night item. Or they may be in two shades of velveteen or corduroy.

There's a great demand for "fill-ins." These are little gadgets to cover the space left by drooping necklines. They are sometimes little white or colored dickies, or they may be scarfs. Here again, it's a mighty poor example of a scarf if it isn't meant to live a double life. Most of them are two-faced, with different fabrics on either side.

Long strands of beads—jet, rhinestone, coral and pearls are also used as "fill-in" pieces. But the rhinestone dog collar is still the neatest looking. This year the high-fashion gals match it with an upper-arm bracelet for sleeveless costumes.

Tail Wags the Lobster for True In the South African Variety Now Being Shipped to U. S. Markets

THOSE lobster tails that come to us from South Africa and other foreign lands are being eyed a bit skeptically by G. C. B. Her letter tells why:

DEAR ANNE:

I would like to know if frozen lobster tails—or just the ones sold at the fish markets—are all right to use. I was always under the impression lobster had to be alive to be good. If they are all right to use, can you give me a recipe how to prepare them?

G. C. B., Hagerstown, Md.

The idea that lobster and crab must be alive when they're dropped in the pot is a left-over from the old days of poor refrigeration, the Fish and Wildlife Service assures me. It still holds good at summer camps or any other place where proper refrigeration cannot be supplied.

However, these lobster tails are frozen almost as soon as they're pulled from the water. If they're kept that way until they reach you, they're in the pink of condition. That's one thing to watch when you're buying them. Get them fully frozen. If your market has allowed them to thaw and then kept them awhile, they may have deteriorated. Thaw them immediately before cooking or drop them frozen into the pot.

The tails come from the spiny or rock lobster, a different character entirely from our New England lobster. It does not have the big claws of the New England lobster and there is little meat in the body. It's practically all in the tail, but there's often more meat there than in the whole body of a native lobster. South Africa, Cuba, and Australia are all shipping the lobster tails here now, but they still sell at somewhat of a premium.

Simplest way to cook them is to drop them into salted boiling water. Boil in covered pot 15 to 17 minutes, split and serve with melted butter .

They can also be split and broiled for about 15 minutes in a preheated oven, about 4 inches under the flame, if you prefer. Baste at intervals with melted butter. Allow one tail to a person. Fancier or hotter sauces may be used, of course, if preferred.

HERE'S a new edition of popular blueberry pie—a fine way to use those big, luscious berries now appearing on the market. It's called Coconut Blueberry Cream Pie

DEAR ANNE:

I am new to this area and have just discovered blueberries! I made a delicious pie with the stewed fruit the other day, but am wondering if they could be used in a cream pie—something like strawberry cream pie. Have you a recipe?

G. D., Arlington, Va.

COCONUT BLUEBERRY CREAM PIE

- 1 package prepared vanilla pudding
- 2 cups milk
- 1 baked 9-inch pie shell
- 2 cups cultivated blueberries
- ½ cup water
- ½ cup sugar
- Dash of cinnamon
- Dash of salt
- 2½ tablespoons cornstarch
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- ½ cup cream, whipped and sweetened
- ¾ cup shredded coconut

Place pudding powder in saucepan. Add milk gradually, stirring constantly. Cook and stir over medium heat until mixture comes to a boil and is thickened. Cool slightly (about 5 minutes) stirring once or twice. Pour into pie shell. Cool.

Meanwhile, combine blueberries and water in a saucepan; bring to a boil. Mix together sugar, cinnamon, salt, and cornstarch. Add to berries and continue cooking until mixture is clear and thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and add lemon juice. Spread at once over top of cooled pie. Chill.

Just before serving, spread with whipped cream and sprinkle with shredded coconut.

Anne answers questions through her column only. Address letters to "Anne," Room D. C. Names and addresses of questioners will be used, unless specifically requested otherwise.

4 Federation Leaders Will Confer in D. C.

Four of the eight department chairmen of the General Federation of Women's Clubs have been called to Washington this week to consult with Mrs. Hiram Cole Houghton, president, because of the international emergency, it was announced today. These women are chairmen of the departments of international relations, public affairs, welfare and education. Existing programs of these various departments will be studied with a view to making adjustments which might render them more useful to our Government at this time of crisis. While in Washington the federation leaders will interview Government specialists in their respective fields.

Those who will confer with Mrs. Houghton are Mrs. Frederic W. Beggs of Ridgewood, N. J., chairman of international relations; Mrs. E. Lee Ozbirn of Oklahoma City, Okla., chairman of public affairs; Mrs. William B. Fowler of Memphis, Tenn., chairman of welfare, and Miss Chloe Gifford of Lexington, Ky., who takes responsibility for the international scholarships sponsored by the General Federation.

Mrs. Nunley Snedegar of Elkins, W. Va., chairman of junior clubs, is also in Washington this week to discuss plans.

Tail Wags the Lobster for True In the South African Variety Now, Being Shipped to U. S. Markets

THOSE lobster tails that come to us from South Africa and other foreign lands are being eyed a bit skeptically by G. C. B. Her letter tells why:

DEAR ANNE:

I would like to know if frozen lobster tails—or just the ones sold at the fish markets—are all right to use. I was always under the impression lobster had to be alive to be good. If they are all right to use, can you give me a recipe how to prepare them?

G. C. B., Hagerstown, Md.

The idea that lobster and crab must be alive when they're dropped in the pot is a left-over from the old days of poor refrigeration, the Fish and Wildlife Service assures me. It still holds good at summer camps or any other place where proper refrigeration cannot be supplied.

However, these lobster tails are frozen almost as soon as they're pulled from the water. If they're kept that way until they reach you, they're in the pink of condition. That's one thing to watch when you're buying them. Get them fully frozen. If your market has allowed them to thaw and then kept them awhile, they may have deteriorated. Thaw them immediately before cooking, or drop them frozen into the pot.

The tails come from the spiny or rock lobster, a different character entirely from our New England lobster. It does not have the big claws of the New England lobster and there is little meat in the body. It's practically all in the tail, but there's often more meat there than in the whole body of a native lobster. South Africa, Cuba, and Australia are all shipping the lobster tails here now, but they still sell at somewhat of a premium.

Simplest way to cook them is to drop them into salted boiling water. Boil in covered pot 15 to 17 minutes, split and serve with melted butter.

They can also be split and broiled for about 15 minutes in a preheated oven, about 4 inches under the flame, if you prefer. Baste at intervals with melted butter. Allow one tail to a person. Fancier or hotter sauces may be used, of course, if preferred.

HERE'S a new edition of popular blueberry pie—a fine way to use those big, luscious berries now appearing on the market. It's called Coconut Blueberry Cream Pie

DEAR ANNE:

I am new to this area and have just discovered blueberries! I made a delicious pie with the stewed fruit the other day, but am wondering if they could be used in a cream pie—something like strawberry cream pie. Have you a recipe?

G. D., Arlington, Va.

COCONUT BLUEBERRY CREAM PIE

1 package prepared vanilla pudding
2 cups milk
1 baked 9-inch pie shell
2 cups cultivated blueberries
½ cup water
½ cup sugar
Dash of cinnamon
Dash of salt
2½ tablespoons cornstarch
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup cream, whipped and sweetened
¾ cup shredded coconut

Place pudding powder in saucepan. Add milk gradually, stirring constantly. Cook and stir over medium heat until mixture comes to a boil and is thickened. Cool slightly (about 5 minutes) stirring once or twice. Pour into pie shell. Cool.

Meanwhile, combine blueberries and water in a saucepan; bring to a boil. Mix together sugar, cinnamon, salt, and cornstarch. Add to berries and continue cooking until mixture is clear and thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and add lemon juice. Spread at once over top of cooled pie. Chill.

Just before serving, spread with whipped cream and sprinkle with shredded coconut.

Your Baby and Mine

Every Neighborhood Has Its Juvenile Villain

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

EVERY neighborhood, regardless of its location, always has some child or children who do not seem to fit into the group and who make trouble for the rest. This is the same problem, in miniature, as exists among nations and it should be good practice for families to learn how to deal with the trouble-maker in their neighborhood in order to have some understanding of how to deal with trouble-making nations.

A puzzled reader wants to know what she and her neighbors can do about the older child who heckles and walks over the younger children. "In our community of several families," she writes, "one boy is quite a few years older than the rest and he has lived here the longest. He has been led by his parents to think that he is quite a champ. He can go anyplace at any time and usually he is right in the middle of the smaller fry, whenever he discovers they are having fun without him.

"Being older and wiser it isn't hard for him to stir up the smaller ones against each other, until they slap and kick each other. He loves this.

"One day the little ones were playing with their tricycles and along comes the champ with one twice as large and all brightly painted. The smaller children got so upset at the remarks he made about theirs that they threw and smashed their playthings until there was nothing left.

"His mother has been approached several times and she just grins. She gets a kick out of her big, bright boy making all this commotion.

"You may say to keep the little ones in the house, but they like to play outside. One wonders if this boy needs friends or companionship he doesn't get at home?"

He undoubtedly needs friends and they should not be friends who are so much younger that they are clay in his hands. He needs the bossing older children will give him to balance his play experiences.

You would be able to weld this situation more to your liking if you would enlist the aid of the older child instead of casting him in the role of neighborhood villian. Talk to him. Tell him how smart he is and how much better he knows how to play than the small fry. Enlist his aid in helping them to learn to play together more amiably. And, then, when trouble develops, go right out and disperse the whole gang, no matter who is at fault. Some cooling down alone will be good for each of them.

Cabbage Roses Giving Way To Daisies in Home Design

By Elizabeth Toomey

NEW YORK (U.P.)—Cabbage roses seem to be giving way to pastel daisies in home decorating schemes.

From several quarters come signs that things are quieting down, color-wise, in the home. A fabric company calls it "a preference for tranquil colors."

The chairman of the Julore design competition, in awarding the fabric design first prize to a light, airy pattern said:

"The design contest points up the current preference for well-organized designs. The bold splashy patterns of fabrics and wallpapers were left out of the prize selections."

Soft browns, coming into prominence in fashionable color schemes, seem to back up the subdued color theories. Another soft, grayed shade—plum—is picked as a coming favorite by Madelyn Smith, stylist for the Shulman Abrash fabric company.

Walls Will Be First to Change

IT WILL take a few re-decorating seasons before this trend becomes apparent in the average home. The walls probably will be the first to show the change.

A paper called "antique rose" is typical of the new trend in flowered wallpaper, according to the United Wallpaper Co. A delicate pink rose is drawn against a background of miniature daisies. In the high fashion version, a charcoal-colored background is used. The tiny daisies in the background form an almost geometric pattern.

Textured and three-dimensional monotone designs are another new way to get a subdued wall background. The American artist Henry Billings designed four new three-dimensional patterns for the Schumacher Co., including a chicken wire design and a shadowed polka dot pattern.

Fabric Designs Used on Paper

ONE group of textured papers in the United Wallpaper line has been adapted from hand-loomed fabrics designed by Dorothy Liebes.

A large plaid design, using red, green and black against a white background, is an identical copy of the original nubby fabric, even to stray glints of gold copied from the occasional metallic thread in the hand-loomed fabric.

This company has a two-tone version of a bamboo blind in its new group of third-dimensional papers. Irregular slats of a bamboo blind are reproduced in white against a grey background, or in light beige against a darker beige ground. Besides making a pleasant background for pictures or bright colored furniture, the third-dimensional patterns give a feeling of increased space in a small room.

Decorators Help Today's Housewife

TODAY'S housewife is supposed to know a lot more about interior decorating than grandmother did. The companies who make home furnishings and fabrics are giving her more and more help. Wallpapers are being grouped in sample books so that several co-ordinating patterns and colors are together.

ENJOY SUMMERTIME SHOPPING ALONG
Connecticut Avenue
WHERE MOST STORES WILL REMAIN OPEN
Saturdays during July and August

Because Saturday is so often the most convenient day of the week for you to shop, practically all the Connecticut Avenue merchants (some of whose names you see here on the draped curtain) have arranged to keep their stores open all day on Summer Saturdays—when so many down-town stores are closed.

A day of shopping on beautiful Connecticut Avenue, away from the push and hot hurry of crowds, is always a delightful experience. And, whatever it be you are looking for, you find it there in comfortable, courteously staffed shops, big enough to maintain wonderfully wide selections of attractive merchandise . . . yet small enough to take a personal interest in serving you well.

Library Books Contain Food (For Thought)

Mrs. May Sperling of 1875 Mintwood pl. nw. works at the Public Library.

She was recalling the other day some of the strange things people use as bookmarks, and then leave behind for the clean-up crews to find.

Playing cards, shoelaces, snapshots, and bobby pins are routine. A shoehorn found the other day was somewhat more exotic. But the undisputed champion is the fellow who marked his place in a Library book with a strip of bacon. Raw.

PREVIEW REVIEW

It's been a year since I recommended a movie. I'm that much of a sourpuss about Hollywood productions.

But the Warner Theater sneak-previewed a corking good cops and robbers story Wednesday night, and I advise you to watch for it. It's "Union Station," with capable William Holden as a tough railroad dick and incomparable Barry Fitzgerald as a wily police inspector.

ONE TRACK MIND

Corinne Lewis of 3856 Florence dr., Alexandria, Va., says that as she was walking down the Avenue the other day, she overheard a bright bit of conversation between two tourists.

CORK-

The wife had said, "Look, Honey, there's the White House." To which the husband, somewhat intoxicated, replied:

"White Horse? I don't see any White Horse."

MORE ABOUT PVT. CAVE

Motorcycle Policeman Edward L. Cave really made an impression on District Liners when he gallantly delivered the ice cream to the girl on the bus, as recounted here yesterday.

Three more reports of his courtesy arrived just after we went to press with yesterday's page. Two readers requested anonymity; the third was Mrs. Jean Anderson of 2327 N. Washington blvd., Arlington, Va. All agreed that the man on Motorcycle 7 should get public recognition.

This may be a big city in some respects, but when it comes to the old-fashioned practice of doing a friendly turn, and speaking a good word for the fellow who does it, we're still country folks. And lucky we are.

WATERGATE NOTES

There is still much discussion of Howard Mitchell's all-Tschaikovsky program, complete with Overture, 1812, field batteries from Fort Myer, and airplane motors overhead.

True enough, Tschaikovsky scored the piece for cannon. But I doubt that he envisioned the cacophonous accompaniment his composition would receive in modern, outdoor performances.

• Whatever can be done to minimize airplane noises on Watergate nights has, presumably, been done. But music-lovers themselves could be a bit more considerate.

The other night, in the middle of a soft, lilting passage that held the audience spellbound, a listener in a canoe decided that it was time to go.

Instead of paddling quietly out into the stream first, the lug started up his outboard motor and made thousands of folks in the auidence gnash their teeth in anger.

Mr. Mitchell probably wished that his cannon were loaded with something more than blanks.

Incidentally, it appears that there's no escaping the Good Humor man. He does a brisk business at the Watergate concerts from a water-borne replica of the standard ice cream cart. And with a minimum of noise, I might add.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Life's problems seldom have a chance to become serious because they're so quickly replaced by weightier problems.

Pan American Decision Reviewed

By Drew Pearson

There was much more than meets the eye behind the rather cool letters exchanged between President Truman and Civil Aeronautics Chairman Joe O'Connell last week.

O'Connell

In the background were not only two curt and unfriendly notes, but the frantic lobbying of three giant airlines for the most lucrative air routes in the world. There was also some clever wire-pulling by members of the palace guard in favor of two of the airlines, Pan American Airways and American Overseas Airlines, while on the other side was a $50,000 fee paid to a former palace guardsman, Clark Clifford, by Howard Hughes of Trans World Airline. In the end, Hughes lost his $50,000.

O'Connell's resignation goes back to the fact that, for months, the CAB has been debating the extremely complicated question of whether Pan American should be allowed to merge with the American Overseas.

During these months of study, it was disclosed that wherever Pan American had received a monopoly route, the efficiency of its service dropped.

Finally, the CAB voted 3 to 2 against the merger—The majority—Chairman O'Connell, Harold Jones and Russell Adams—wrote a strong opinion, finding that the American system of free competition must be preserved and that monopoly would hurt the best interests of the Nation. Two members—Josh Lee and Oswald Ryan, long known as Pan Am's best friend on the CAB—dissented.

On June 30, the White House wrote back over the signature of Budget Director Frederick J. Lawton that President Truman had OK'd the majority's findings and was against the Pan American merger. But Lawton, who, incidentally, personally favored Pan Am's position, added that it was felt the CAB should leave the door open for further consideration of overseas routes.

When Chairman O'Connell received this note, he expressed some mystification at Lawton's addendum. Nevertheless, the board started to announce its findings to the public. By this time, however, it was late in the afternoon and Oswald Ryan, friend of Pan American, argued that it was too late in the day.

Next morning, it became known that Ryan had paid a secret visit to the President and had personally urged Pan American's case. At 9:45 a. m., the CAB received a phone call from the White House to hold up the 11 a. m. scheduled announcement turning down the Pan Am merger and, immediately thereafter, Ryan appeared before his CAB colleagues to tell them that President Truman had asked him to carry the oral message that he wanted the entire question of the merger reversed, and that Pan American should be permitted to consolidate with American Overseas.

This caused Chairman O'Connell to hit the ceiling.

"Why didn't I know about this?" he asked other CAB members.

"I consider this the shabbiest treatment I have had since I became chairman of the board."

O'Connell went even further and wrote a hot personal letter to the President in which in effect he said:

"I respect your authority as President to review decisions of the Civil Aeronautics Board in matters affecting overseas air travel.

"Of quite another stripe, however, was the recent meeting of you and your advisers with the vice chairman of the board, Oswald Ryan, without at least showing me the courtesy of inviting me to participate. Consequently, I can only ask that my resignation, which I recently submitted to you effective July 1, be made effective immediately."

O'Connell had seen the President on June 13, and in a very friendly conversation had asked permission to resign because of financial reasons. Truman at that time, however, had refused to accept the resignation and begged him to remain.

After receiving O'Connell's curt note, however, the President wrote back a one-paragraph letter stating he had given instructions that O'Connell be invited to the meeting with Ryan, but apparently there had been a slip-up by his staff.

Truman then abruptly announced O'Connell's resignation.

The big question in Washington is—what made the President change his mind and rule in favor of a company which has tried to cut his throat politically, and which is now under investigation for wiretapping?

Here are some clues to the answer.

On July 2, right after the White House letter of June 30, opposing the merger, Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson, who formerly was retained by Pan American, visited the President on the yacht Williamsburg. Johnson's law firm received $18,000 in lobbying fees from Pan Am in 1948, and another $18,000 in 1949.

In addition to Johnson, Pan American has other friends among the palace guard, including White House Secretary Matt Connelly and John Steelman. They in turn were opposed by former White House Counsel Clark Clifford, who was hired by Howard Hughes. But the palace guard argued to Truman that the $50,000 Hughes paid to Clifford would make it look as if this money had influenced Truman's decision against the merger, and this was one of the factors causing Truman to reverse himself.

Note—American Overseas Airlines also retains the former law firm of Secretary of State Dean Acheson.
